

Salt Marsh succession

Some of plants are Halophytes – plants that can tolerate saline (salty) conditions.

Salt Marshes are areas of flat, silty sediments that accumulate around estuaries or lagoons.

They develop;

- In sheltered areas where deposition occurs
- Where salt and fresh water meets
- Where there are no strong tides or currents to prevent deposition or accumulation

As mud flats develop, salt tolerate plants (such as eelgrass) begin to colonise and stabilise them. Halophytes such as cordgrass, help slow down tidal flow and trap more mud and silt. As sediment accumulates, the surface becomes drier and different plants colonise e.g. sea asters. Creeks (created by water flowing across the estuary At low tide) divide up the salt marshes
