From Horse To Helicopter Transporting The British Army In War And Peace 1648 1989:

From Horse to Helicopter John Sutton, John Walker, 1989-11-16 This is a pictorial history of Army transportation The book outlines the development of the three modes of transport used in supporting the British Army on land in water and in air from the horse to the helicopter Both the authors are retired officers who served in the Royal Corps of Transport

Monty's Functional Doctrine Charles Forrester, 2015-08-19 Using a combination of new perspectives and new evidence this book presents a reinterpretation of how 21st Army Group produced a successful combined arms doctrine by late 1944 and implemented this in early 1945 Historians professional military personnel and those interested in military history should read this book which contributes to the radical reappraisal of Great Britain's fighting forces in the last years of the Second World War with an exploration of the reasons why 21st Army Group was able in 1944-45 to integrate the operations of its armor and infantry The key to understanding how the outcome developed lies in understanding the ways in which the two processes of fighting and the creation of doctrine interrelated This requires both a conventional focus on command and a cross level study of Montgomery and a significant group of commanders The issue of whether or not this integration of combat arms a guide to operational fighting capability had any basis in a common doctrine is an important one Alongside this stands the new light this work throws on how such doctrine was created A third interrelated contribution is in answering how Montgomery commanded and whether and to what extent doctrine was imposed or generated Further it investigates how a group of effervescent commanders interrelated and what the impact of those interrelationships was in the formulation of a workable doctrine The book makes an original contribution to the debate on Montgomery's command style in Northwest Europe and its consequences and integrates this with tracking down and disentangling the roots of his ideas and his role in the creation of doctrine for the British Army's final push against the Germans In particular the author is able to do something that has defeated previous authors to explain how doctrine was evolved and especially who was responsible for providing the crucial first drafts and the role Montgomery played in revising codifying and disseminating it A Model For Modern Nonlinear Noncontiguous Operations: The War In Burma, 1943 To 1945 Major John Atkins RLC, 2014-08-15 The War in Burma is all too frequently forgotten as a source of relevant military experience Admittedly it did not have the strategic importance of other theatres such as the Pacific or North West Europe but it did witness some of the hardest and most bitter fighting of the War Because of the nature of the terrain limited allied resources and the type of dispersed operations conducted by the enemy Allied forces were forced to adapt a new method of warfighting to counter these difficulties The aircraft and the radio revolutionised the way that the campaign was to be conducted It was discovered for the first time that formations could be dispersed across the battlespace and could fight independently of a ground line of communication The first formation to prove that this approach was possible was the 77th Brigade later to earn the title of Chindits and commanded by Brigadier Orde Wingate Employing Wingate's theories of Long Range Penetration for the first time the Chindits travelled hundreds of miles behind the enemy's forward positions and attacked his rear areas and lines of communication. Throughout the operation they received all their supply requirements from transport aircraft and were never in physical contact with friendly forces. The Chindits conducted a truly joint mobile nonlinear and noncontiguous operation. Within a year conventional brigades, divisions and corps of the British Fourteenth Army and the American Chinese forces in northern Burma were conducting similar operations, this time supported by many more aircraft for both logistic sustainment and fires. Field Marshall William Slim called it a new way of fighting and suggested that four elements contributed to the new concept: joint operations, the use of mission command, the reduction of the logistic footprint of the force to increase tempo, and the conduct of operations by dispersed forces which are tactically independent but focused on operational level objectives.
