The Decline of US Labor Unions and the Role of Trade Robert Baldwin, 2003-06-05 Between 1977 and 1997 there was a precipitous decline in the proportion of US workers with median education 12 years or less who were represented by a labor union from 29 to 14 percent the unionization proportion declined much less among workers with above median education 19 to 13 percent The union wage premium also declined for workers with basic education from 58 to 51 percent whereas it rose slightly for better educated unionists from 18 to 19 percent Thus whatever safety net American unions provide was disproportionately lost by the less educated workers who arguably need it the most In this study Robert E Baldwin investigates the role of changes in US imports and exports in explaining this dramatic decline The main analysis which includes workers in manufacturing as well as service sectors relates changes in the number of union workers across industries to changes in domestic spending imports exports and the intensity with which labor is used across these industries for both union and nonunion workers Baldwin finds that although globalization i e increased trade seems to have contributed only modestly to the general decline in unionization it has more importantly contributed to the decline in unionization among workers with less education The study concludes with a discussion on the implication of this and the other findings for governmental policy and for the policy position of unions toward globalization

The Quality of Vocational Education Adam Gamoran, 1998 Education, Social Background and Cognitive Ability Gary N. Marks, 2013-10-23 Are socioeconomic inequalities in education declining Is socioeconomic background becoming less important for people s occupational class or status How important is cognitive ability for education and later occupational outcomes How do countries differ in the importance of socioeconomic background for education and work Gary N Marks argues that in western industrialized countries pervasive views that socioeconomic background or class background has strong and unchanging relationships with education and later socioeconomic outcomes resistant to policy and social change are unfounded Marks provides a large amount of evidence from many countries showing that the influence of socioeconomic background for education is moderate and most often declining and socioeconomic background has only very weak impacts on adults occupation and earnings after taking into account education and cognitive ability Furthermore Marks shows that cognitive ability is a more powerful influence than socioeconomic background for educational outcomes and that in addition to its indirect effects through education has a direct effect on occupation and earnings Its effects cannot be dismissed as simply another aspect of socioeconomic background nor do the usual criticisms of cognitive ability apply The declining effects for socioeconomic background and the importance of cognitive ability support several of the contentions of modernization theory The book contributes to a variety of debates within sociology quantitative and qualitative approaches explanatory and non explanatory theory the relationship between theory and empirical research the role of political ideology in research sociology as a social science and sociology s contribution to knowledge about contemporary societies It will appeal to professionals in the fields of education and sociology as well as postgraduate students and academics involved in the debate Trends in Education ,1978 Educational Planning Jacques Hallak,Francoise Françoise
