What is the article about?	This article discusses a study of sixty elderly men aged 61 to 81 in Sydney, Australia. A developmental and phenomenological approach was used in subjective and objective assessments. An audio taped protocol was first conducted and consisted of lengthy open interviews with participants relating to activities, interests, relationships, and thoughts. The final interview consisted of 3 sections which were used to assess background information, mental engagements (activities, hobbies, interests etc), emotional engagements with significant others, losses in aging (work, health, financial, social), and subjective well-being.
Why was the research performed?	The purpose of this study was to examine the intra-psychic components of adjustment in aging. It was designed to determine whether present and past mental and emotional engagements had positive effects on the well-being of elderly men.
Findings	Higher degrees of perceived mental engagement were found to be indicators of well being and a moderator of losses associated with work, health, and finances. Common forms of mental engagement listed by participants were hobbies, studies, community affairs, reading, and writing, listening to radio, and watching television. In this sample, retirement was perceived as a significant loss, or stress, even though it was voluntary in the majority of cases. The authors believe that mental engagement fills the void of lost work or health. Emotional engagements had a positive association with well-being, but did not moderate losses. The latter was attributed to the gender of the sample, as men tend to place less importance on relationships and emotional support.
Strengths	As in similar studies, the authors used a multi-dimensional approach to measure well-being in this sample. The article also demonstrated the positive effects of mental engagement, which supports the findings of
