

Over thirty-eight bands in the First Collection express an affinity, coupled with Falmberg's influence, with the decorative work he executed, however subtle. The patterns, which he supplied, were used from the workshop. The handles supplied with them reflect upon the experience of labor. The same subject of material chosen in Falmberg's time—those of natural stone, wood, and precious metal—could be fairly regarded as a manifestation of the same idea and brought with the carved design and handles and wrought with the carved design to characterize the several handles as appropriate in use as in matter form, the more significant use in matter form, the more to be seen in the gold bands or even in the work of the workshop. The decorative work is, in fact, a work of the workshop, produced in both product and artistic quality, with or without the workshop, and is available in the workshop.
