INTRODUCTION: THE CONCEPTS BEHIND THE CAPITAL APPROACH

Capital budgeting is the process of evaluating proposed projects by comparing their expected cash flows over time with the costs of financing those cash flows. Projects are evaluated by calculating the net present value (NPV) or internal rate of return (IRR) of the cash flows.

Capital project analysis is often associated with corporate finance, but it is also important in agriculture. Capital budgeting is used to evaluate investment opportunities, such as new equipment, buildings, and facilities, and to determine whether to expand production. It is also used to evaluate the financial performance of existing operations and to determine whether to sell or close them.

WHAT IS A "Project"?

A project is a well-defined task or sequence of events that are related to a specific goal and are implemented sequentially to achieve that goal. This article discusses capital budgeting for the evaluation of projects. It is not intended to discuss capital budgeting for the evaluation of investments in fixed assets, such as buildings, equipment, and land. These types of investments are typically evaluated using a different set of techniques, such as the capital asset pricing model (CAPM) and the dividend discount model (DDM).
