

Foodborne and Waterborne Disease in Canada – 1978 Annual Summary

E. C. D. TODD

Bureau of Microbial Hazards, Food Directorate, Health Protection Branch, Health and Welfare Canada, Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0L2, Canada

(Received for publication March 25, 1985)

ABSTRACT

Data on foodborne disease in Canada in 1978 are compared with data for 1977. A total of 836 incidents, comprising 642 outbreaks and 194 single cases, causing illness in 5960 persons was reported for 1978. The number of incidents and cases increased by 7.5% and 23.9%, respectively, from 1977 to 1978. Like the previous year, Salmonella spp. were responsible for more incidents (67) and cases (2171) than any other agent. Other incidents were caused by Staphylococcus aureus (31), suspect mold and yeast (17), Bacillus cereus (9), Clostridium perfringens (7), Clostridium botulinum (6), and Shigella sonnei (1). Four incidents of trichinosis, and two each of mushroom, lupin alkaloid and paralytic shellfish poisoning occurred. One scombroid poisoning outbreak was reported. Chemicals implicated in causing illness included tin, rancid compounds and extraneous matter. The deaths of five persons were attributed to foodborne disease. About 32% of incidents and 39% of cases were associated with meat and poultry. Vegetables, fruits, bakery products and marine products were also important vehicles in causing foodborne disease. Mishandling of food took place mainly in foodservice establishments (25.6% of incidents, 56.1% of cases) and homes (12.4% of incidents, 6.4% of cases). However, mishandling by manufacturers caused some problems including salmonellosis from iced cakes made with cracked eggs and staphylococcal intoxication from ham, sausage, chicken and canned salmon. Over 54% of reported foodborne disease incidents occurred in Ontario and more than 18% in British Columbia, but the number of incidents per 100,000 population was highest in the Northwest Territories. Narrative reports of selected foodborne incidents are presented.

Annual summary reports from 1973 to 1977 have been published (9,10,11,12,13). In addition detailed summaries for these years and 1978 are available from the author on request (1,2,3,4,5,6). There were no waterborne incidents reported in 1978; so, only foodborne disease data will be discussed.

FOODBORNE DISEASE DATA

Table 1 shows that 836 incidents, comprising 642 outbreaks and 194 single cases, occurred in 1978, with a total of 5960 persons ill. Compared with figures for 1977 there was an increase of 7.5% for incidents and of 23.9% for cases. The agent responsible for most incidents (67) comprising 61 outbreaks and 6 single cases, was Salmonella (Table 2). This is double the number of Salmonella incidents that occurred in 1977 (32) and cases almost tripled (2171) over the same period. Staphylococcus aureus was responsible for 31 incidents and Bacillus cereus for 9. Illnesses from Clostridium perfringens dropped by about half (7 incidents, 263 cases in 1978, 14 incidents, 499 cases in 1977). The number of incidents of botulism occurring in 1978 (6) was similar to those for the five previous years (4-6 incidents). Shigella sonnei caused an outbreak involving 200 persons. Seventeen incidents suspected of being caused by mold and yeast were reported, thereby continuing the trend over the last few years and indicating that these agents may be foodborne disease pathogens.

There were four incidents (11 cases) of trichinosis in 1978, compared with three incidents (7 cases) in 1977. Two incidents each of Amanita (mushroom) intoxication, lupin alkaloid poisoning and paralytic shellfish poisoning were reported for 1978. There was one scombroid poisoning outbreak. There were fewer illnesses from chemicals (35 incidents and 63 cases in 1978, 37 incidents and 101 cases in 1977). Struvite crystals, methanol excess menthol and sorbitol were chemical agents recorded for the first time in these summaries although extraneous matter, rancid compounds and metals continued to be the chemicals causing most problems.

Five deaths occurred in 1978, one each from intoxication caused by Clostridium botulinum, C. perfringens, S. aureus and methanol and one other resulting from infection by Salmonella enteritidis.

Foods associated with incidents and cases are shown in Table 3. The number of incidents involving meat (22.0%) was, as in other years, far greater than for any other kind of food. Beef, hamburger, sausages, ham and pork were the main types of meat implicated. Vegetables and fruits, mainly as canned or bottled products, was the next largest category (11.8%). Cases associated with poultry, particularly turkey, however, were considerably higher (25.7%) than for any other category, although incidents represented only 9.6% of the total. Bakery prod-
