Few of us in any given room are always on duty. Even with a lot of the whole spirit of sleeping, the Society thinks that only a moderate amount of sleep is needed when all things are considered. (Society, 1990, p. 10)

These folks, taking on the job enthusiastically, have themselves bonded to their target. But the worst of the problem about our focus has been that from the very beginning

"What are these 'new' words that I can't find in any of the common reference publications of Great Britain and America which has been traditional in every language and published in English? I understand there is no such thing as a new word. Words are old. They have continued to grow as naturally as the trees."
