Means, Robin, Morbey, Hazel, 2002-04-17 This study reflects a growing recognition of the contribution that studies of the post war welfare state can make to contemporary debates about the restructuring of welfare Drawing on the community care debates from 1971 to 1993 it illuminates contemporary concerns about such key issues as rationing care the health and social care divide the changing role of residential care and the growing emphasis on provider competition From community care to market care focuses on the interpretation and development of national policy at local authority level in four contrasting local authorities. The results of the study will make a significant contribution to our understanding of the community care provision of older people.

From Poor Law to Community Care Means, Robin, Smith, Randall, 1998-09. Recent community care changes have raised issues about the changing role of the public and voluntary sectors in the provision of social care to elderly people. The purpose of this book is to set these debates in the context of the historical growth of welfare services from 1939 through to 1971.

Matching Resources to Needs in Community Care Bleddyn Davies, David Challis, 2018-08-09. First published in 1986. Matching Resources to Needs describes the PSSRU's community care approach and analyses the first of the community care projects: a seminal set of experiments in the care of the elderly at high risk of institutional long term care. The experiments create field structures which provide incentives to improve efficiency: decentralised power over resources being balanced by enhanced accountability. The first part explains the approach, analyses the causes of inefficiency in British social care and reviews British and American evidence about the relationships between resources, recipient characteristics and outcomes. The approach is compared with some two dozen American experiments hitherto unknown in the UK. It describes the design of the project and its evaluation. The authors then examine the experimental results. They show that cost and welfare effects are better and the costs of outcomes are lower for recipients of community care. The third part of the book uses observational and other data to explore the relationships between structures, assumptive worlds, causal processes and outcomes and their costs. It also analyses the performance of the core tasks of entrepreneurial case management for types of case. The book concludes with a discussion of the broader implications of this approach to community care.

Implementing the New Community Care Jane E. Lewis, Howard Glennerster, 1996-01-01. What were the aims of the new community care policy? How has the policy been implemented? How far have the aims of the policy been achieved? These are just some of the questions addressed by the authors of this book. They trace the implementation of the 1990 community care legislation in five local authorities between 1992 and 1994. The book suggests that central government's main aim was to bring social security spending under control. Services issues were always secondary. Nevertheless, implications both for clients and services have been important and often unintended. Local authorities have faced considerable difficulties in implementing the legislation. The process is followed in five local authorities: one county and four London boroughs. Local authorities were faced with a mass of central government guidance and a number of key changes to make. It traces three changes in detail: the implementation of the purchaser-provider split and the creation of a social care market; the introduction of care management and efforts to collaborate with health authorities. The book compares how the authorities tackled these issues and examines why they approached the tasks so differently. It also analyses the way in which social services departments have changed in the process and the extent to which we are seeing the end of the Seebohm Departments.

Implementing the New Community Care will be of interest to students of social policy, health and social welfare and social work.
