

Transition from Social philosophy to Sociology

Sociology is one of the newer academic disciplines, tracing its origins no further back than the middle of the nineteenth century. It has a short history. Sociology, the science of society, is the youngest and it came to be established only in the nineteenth century. The French philosopher, Auguste Comte gave sociology and a programme for its development. For thousands of years, society has been a subject for speculation and enquiry. Yet sociology is modern science that originated only within the last hundred eighty-one years or so.

The study of society, however, can be traced to the Greek philosophers, Plato and Aristotle. The philosophical basis of Plato and Aristotle characterized the observations of man for a very long period of time. The literature concerning society and its problems found a place in the Republic of Plato (427-347 B.C.) and in the Politic and Ethics of Aristotle (388-327 B.C.).

Plato was the first Western philosopher who attempted a systematic study of society. In the Ethics and Politics of Aristotle, we find the first major attempts of systematic dealing of law, the society and State.

In the sixteenth century, a precise distinction was made between State and society. Thomas Hobbes and Machiavelli were outstanding contributors to the realistic approach to social problems. Hobbes in his Levithan and Machiavelli in his Prince analyses the system of statecraft and also put forward conditions for the success of the State.

Eighteenth-century Europe witnessed the publication of a number of great works of observation, for example, Rousseau's social contract and Montesquieu's De l'esprit des lois. These writings were still in the philosophical tradition, but they contained sufficient analysis to lay the foundation for a separate social science.

Various social sciences gradually evolved in response to the varied needs of human living. The writings in the philosophical tradition laid the foundation for the development of social sciences. With the passage of time, various social sciences developed one after another and began to pursue

History Made Conscious Geoff Eley, 2023-08-22 How History has changed in the half century since the 1960s During the last fifty years the writing of history underwent two massive transformations First powered by Marxism and other materialist sociologies the great social history wave instated the value of social explanation Then responding to new theoretical debates the cultural turn upset many of those freshly earned certainties Each challenge was profoundly informed by politics from issues of class gender and race to those of identity empire and the postcolonial The resulting controversies brought historians radically changed possibilities expanding subject matters unfamiliar approaches greater openness to theory and other disciplines a new place in the public culture History Made Conscious offers snapshots of a discipline continuously rethinking its charge How might we understand the social and the cultural together How do we collaborate most fruitfully across disciplines If we take theory seriously how does that change what historians do How should we think differently about politics Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science ,1894 Publications of the American Academy of Political and Social Science American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1899 The Changing Transition to Adulthood Francis Goldscheider, Calvin Goldscheider, 1999-06-14 This book places changes in leaving and returning home in the context of the major events of 20th century America The authors examine the reasons children ultimately leave home to live on their own and how the pattern has changed throughout the 20th century Using data from the National Survey of Families and Households Goldscheider and Goldscheider have constructed these patterns for when children leave home and what the most important criteria for doing so are to different groups in America including men women Blacks Hispanics Whites and different religious groups and social classes
