

single trial using current linguistic tools, identifying the different language styles and their properties used by lawyers at different stages of the trial. We also note the excellent chapter that provides an overview of the work to date on the linguistic analysis of legal language.

Stygall's book may also be useful for lawyers and judges in pointing out legal terms and trial formalities in need of clarification. After all, the point of any civil trial is to resolve a problem, not to maintain anachronistic power relationships.

From the anthology Language and Law, we found several impressive articles that examine the legal implications of instances of language use where societies have substantially different views. Goldman explores how European and Huli (New Guinea) legal systems differ in their respective emphasis on "intent" or "consequences" in cases of serious injury or death. Both Walsh and Eades identify fundamentally different communication patterns used by Australian Aborigines, even when using English, and show how these patterns, such as "gratuitous concurrence," can work to their disadvantage in a court of law based on the English system. Simpson deals with difficulties associated with Aboriginal intellectual property rights and notes gathered by anthropologists who were documenting Warumungu land-tenure claims against the Australian government.

Two articles addressed the comprehensibility of legal language, both in the interview of children (Brennen) and the clarity of language in documents giving legal notice (Labov and Harris) and their implications for the pursuit of justice. The methods used here to get at the question of comprehensibility are the sort of thing that Stygall could have used in Trial Language to demonstrate the degree to which legal jargon was comprehensible to users of ordinary language. The issue of the comprehensibility of legal language is also taken up in the first section. Harris points out the presence of ideology in courtroom exchanges, and Maley and Bhatia relate the presence of characteristic structural properties in legal language to the need for explicit statutes.

While the extension of linguistic investigation into the analysis of law clearly opens a new domain of interest for linguists and anthropologists, its relevance to lawyers is less certain. This concern is what prompted, we believe, the summaries at the end of each section written by members of the legal profession. Nevertheless, the brevity and the limited scope of the summaries following sections one and three suggest that these sections are of less interest to legal professionals than those in section two, which drew considerable discussion and comment. In closing, we find it somewhat ironic that, while linguists are aware of difficulties in communication posed by the gap between legal and ordinary language, they would do well to take cognizance of the special nature of their own language when communicating to those outside their profession.

Literary Culture and the Pacific Vanessa Smith, 1998-01-08 This 1998 book examines a range of nineteenth century European accounts from the Pacific depicting Polynesian responses to imported metropolitan culture in particular its technologies of writing and print Texts designed to present self affirming images of native wonderment at European culture in fact betray the emergence of more complex modes of appropriation and interrogation by the Pacific peoples Vanessa Smith argues that the Pacific islanders called into question the material basis and symbolic capacities of writing even as they were first being framed in written representations Examining accounts by beachcombers and missionaries she suggests that complex modes of self authorization informed the transmission of new cultural practices to the Pacific peoples This shift of attention towards reception and appropriation provides the context for a detailed discussion of Robert Louis Stevenson's late Pacific writings

Impersonal Constructions Andrej Malchukov, Anna Siewierska, 2011-07-20 This volume offers a much needed typological perspective on impersonal constructions which are here viewed broadly as constructions lacking a referential subject The contributions to this volume deal with all types of impersonality namely constructions featuring nonagentive subjects including those with experiential predicates A impersonals presentational constructions with a notional subject deficient in topicality T impersonals and constructions with a notional subject lacking in referential properties R impersonals i e both meteo constructions and man constructions The typological discussion benefits from a good coverage of impersonality in European languages but also includes considerations of several African American South East Asian Australian and Oceanic languages The variation in the cross linguistic realization of impersonality and the diachronic pathways leading to and from impersonality documented in this volume point to a novel perspective on impersonals as transitional structures or an intermediate stage of a more basic diachronic change be it from transitive to intransitive or from active to passive or participant to event centered construction      Language and Culture in Dialogue Andrew J. Strathern, Pamela J. Stewart, 2020-05-31

In this book Andrew J Strathern and Pamela J Stewart delineate the relationship between language in particular and culture in general by focusing on language as both social practice and a means of classifying and interpreting the world A traditional linguistic approach to a focus on language is illuminated by their anthropological emphasis on the embodiment of relationships and experience In the book the body is placed in the foreground for understanding language in culture which helps in turn to understand how it enables us to adapt to the world of lived material experience Written in an accessible style and drawing on an extensive corpus of primary field research from Papua New Guinea Samoa Japan Taiwan Scotland and Ireland Strathern and Stewart present a world anthropology which links together European North American and Asia Pacific approaches to the topic Students and scholars alike of sociocultural anthropology linguistic anthropology and linguistics will benefit from this engaging work on how the various components of our culture are informed and shaped through language      Culture & Rhetoric Ivo A. Strecker, Stephen A. Tyler, 2009

While some scholars have said that there is no such thing as culture and have urged to abandon the concept altogether the contributors to this volume overcome this impasse by understanding cultures and their representations for what they ultimately are rhetorical constructs These senior international scholars explore the complex relationships between culture and rhetoric arguing that just as rhetoric is founded in culture culture is founded in rhetoric This intersection constitutes the central theme of the first part of the book while the second is dedicated to the study of figuration as a common ground of rhetoric and anthropology The book offers a compelling range of theoretical reflections historical vistas and empirical investigations which aim to show how people talk themselves and others into particular modalities of thought and action and how rhetoric and culture in this way are co emergent It thus turns a new page in the history of academic discourse by bringing two disciplines anthropology and rhetoric together in a way that has never been done before Publisher s website      Allah Made Us Rudolf Pell Gaudio, 2011-09-13
