Foreign Investors Under Stress Ila Patnaik, Ajay Shah, Mr. Nirvikar Singh, 2013-05-22 Emerging market policy makers have been concerned about the financial stability implications of financial globalization These concerns are focused on behavior under stressed conditions Do tail events in the home country trigger off extreme responses by foreign investors are foreign investors fair weather friends In this is there asymmetry between the response of foreign investors to very good versus very bad days Do foreign investors have a major impact on domestic markets through large inflows or outflows are they big fish in a small pond Do extreme events in world markets induce extreme behavior by foreign investors thus making them vectors of crisis transmission We propose a modified event study methodology focused on tail events which yields evidence on these questions The results for India do not suggest that financial globalization has induced instability on the equity market
