

The ESRC Review of Government Social Classifications

David Rose and Karen O'Reilly

The ESRC Review of Government Social Classifications

JANUARY 2009

- A joint publication from the Economic and Social Research Council and the Government Statistical Service

The ESRC Review of Government Social Classifications

The report describes and explains the new government social classification designed to replace both Social Class based on Occupation and Social Economic Groups in 2001. It contains a full account of the new scheme, its conceptual basis and of the extensive consultation to be conducted with it. It also includes the background to what allows researchers to understand the classification from occupation and employment status data. In addition, the report also discusses the remaining work of the ESRC Review of Government Social Classifications before the final and definitive version of the new scheme can be produced.

The report will be a vital resource for all users of the current government social classifications, as well as for users of other classification schemes. Because it explains the process of conceptualising, operationalising, testing and validating a major policy and research tool, it will equally be of value for university research on social inequality, labour markets, economic sociology, health inequality, epidemiology, social policy, social sciences and social science methodology.

David Rose is Professor of Sociology in the Institute of Social and Economic Research, University of Essex, and Academic Co-ordinator of the ESRC Review of Government Social Classifications.

Karen O'Reilly is a Senior Research Officer in the ESRC and was formerly the Academic Academic Co-ordinator for the Review. They are joint authors of a companion volume to this report, Constructing Class (ESRC/ONS, January 1999).

The Office for National Statistics works in partnership with others in the Government Statistical Service to provide feedback government and the wider community with the statistical information, analysis and advice needed to improve decision-making, stimulate research and inform debate. It also, together with the other ONS, aims to provide an authoritative and impartial picture of society and a window on the work and performance of government, allowing the impact of government policies and actions to be assessed.

The Economic and Social Research Council is the UK's leading research agency addressing economic and social concerns.

We aim to provide high quality research on issues of importance to business, the public sector and government.

The main considered include economic competitiveness, the effectiveness of public services and policy, and the quality of life.

The ESRC is an independent organisation, established by Royal Charter in 1969, and funded mainly by government.
