Europe, Strategy and Armed Forces Sven Biscop, Jo Coelmont, 2013-03 This book examines how the European Union can pursue a grand strategy and become a distinct global actor in a world of emerging great powers At the grand strategic level its sheer economic size makes the EU a global power However the EU needs to take into account that many international actors continue to measure power mostly by assessing military capability To preserve its status as an economic power therefore the EU has to become a power across the board which requires a grand strategy and the means and the will to proactively pursue one The authors of this book aim to demonstrate that the EU can develop a purposive yet distinctive grand strategy that preserves the value based nature of EU external action while also safeguarding its vital economic interests The book analyses the existing military capability of the European Union and its bottom up nature which results in a national based focus in the member states impeding deployment capability A systematic realignment of national defence planning at the strategic level will enable each member state to focus its defence effort on the right capabilities make maximal use of pooling and specialization and contribute to multinational projects in order to address Europe's strategic capability shortfalls A stronger Europe will therefore result it is argued a real global actor which can then become an equal strategic partner to the United States leading to a revitalized Transatlantic partnership in turn This book will be of interest to students of military studies European Union policy strategic studies and International Relations generally Teachers' Manual for Human Geography J.
