devil that God ever created and further marred after creating him He is a long bony creature like a knobbly ram rod and his face is about the colour and shape of a damp mildewed walnut To hide a bald head into which a silver plate has been fixed he wears a luxuriant curly brown wig like those that used to adorn waxen gentlemen in hair dressing windows His is one of those unhappy moustaches that stick out straight and scanty like a cat s He has the slit of a letter box mouth of the Irishman in caricature and only half a dozen teeth spaced like a skeleton company Nothing will induce him to procure false ones It is a matter of principle Between the wearing of false hair and the wearing of false teeth he makes a distinction of unfathomable subtlety He is an obstinate beast If he wasn t he would not with four fingers of his right hand shot away have remained with me on that gun In the same way neither tears nor entreaties nor abuse have induced him to wear a glass eye On high days and holidays whenever he desires to look smart and dashing he covers the unpleasing orifice with a black shade In ordinary workaday life he cares not how much he offends the aesthetic sense But the other eye the sound left eye is a wonder the precious jewel set in the head of the ugly toad It is large of ultra marine blue steady fearless humorous tender everything heroic and beautiful and romantic you can imagine about eyes Let him clap a hand over that eye and you will hold him the most dreadful ogre that ever escaped out of a fairy tale Let him clap a hand over the other eye and look full at you out of the good one and you will think him the Knightliest man that ever was and in my poor opinion you would not be far wrong So out of this nightmare of a face the one beautiful eye of Sergeant Marigold was bent on me as he delivered his message
