

What should you do if a person is injured or having a medical emergency?

The key to providing first aid involves making important decisions in the best interest of an injured person. If there is an accident or a person appears injured, first, stay calm and assess the situation. Check the scene. Your own safety is the first thing to consider. Make sure not to be in danger. If a person appears seriously injured, unconscious, or in medical distress, it is important to call 911 immediately.

One thing to avoid doing is moving an injured person, especially if it appears they have injured their head, neck, or back unless they are at risk of being further hurt. Moving an injured person, especially incorrectly, can lead to further injuries and possible paralysis. If a person has a serious wound that is bleeding, apply gentle pressure to stop the bleeding, until help arrives.

Directions: Answer each question.

1. What should be done first if there is an emergency?
2. When should 911 be called?
3. What is one thing to avoid doing with an injured person?
4. What should be done if a person has serious wound that is bleeding?

When you call 911, be prepared to answer the call-taker's questions, which may include:

- The location of the emergency, including the street address.
- The phone number from which you are calling.
- The nature of the emergency.
- The description of injuries or symptoms of the person with the emergency.

Remember, the call-taker's questions are important to aid in supplying adequate help quickly. Be prepared to follow any instructions from the call-taker. Many 911 centers can provide aid until help arrives, such as providing step-by-step instructions to aid someone who is choking or needs first aid or CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation). Do not hang up until the call-taker instructs you to.

Directions: Answer each question.

5. What will need to be provided to 911 operator, besides a location and phone number?
6. Whose instructions should be followed?
7. What will the 911 provide?
8. What should not be done?
