

Human Health and the Social Environment

The social environment can be defined broadly as the social conditions that influence our lives and the life of our communities. An important part of the social environment is our social connectedness, which ranges from our individual interactions with one another to interactions in groups and organizations. The concept that social connectedness is essential for ensuring human health and well-being has been the subject of much research and is now well established (see Putnam, 2000, for review).

A panel of speakers and respondents explored the concept of social capital, delineated the positive effects of social capital on health, and discussed means of restoring social capital in our communities. They also described the tenets of the environmental justice movement, discussed areas in which environmental justice is still needed, and emphasized the importance of bringing environmental justice to bear in every part of society.

SOCIAL CAPITAL

Economists often define accumulated items of worth as capital, a limited resource that enhances productivity. The term "capital" can refer to physical objects (tools, materials, structures), human properties (individual intellect, education, training), or social connections within a community (social networks, civic engagement). Whereas human capital refers only to the contribution of the individual, social capital can be defined as the accumulated connections, or social networks, among individuals and the norms of shared trustworthiness and reciprocity that arise from them (Putnam, 2000). The term "social capital" calls attention to the ways in which our lives are made more productive by social ties (Putnam, 2000).

Social connections, or networks, are formed informally among family and friends and in neighborhoods, and more formally in the workplace, in places of worship, and in a variety of other organizations. Social capital implies a continu-

Health And The Environment In The Southeastern United States Rebuilding Unity Workshop Summary:

Health and the Environment in the Southeastern United States Institute of Medicine, Board on Health Sciences Policy, Roundtable on Environmental Health Sciences, Research, and Medicine, 2002-11-30 The purpose of this regional workshop in the Southeast was to broaden the environmental health perspective from its typical focus on environmental toxicology to a view that included the impact of the natural built and social environments on human health Early in the planning Roundtable members realized that the process of engaging speakers and developing an agenda for the workshop would be nearly as instructive as the workshop itself In their efforts to encourage a wide scope of participation Roundtable members sought input from individuals from a broad range of diverse fields urban planners transportation engineers landscape architects developers clergy local elected officials heads of industry and others This workshop summary captures the discussions that occurred during the two day meeting During this workshop four main themes were explored 1 environmental and individual health are intrinsically intertwined 2 traditional methods of ensuring environmental health protection such as regulations should be balanced by more cooperative approaches to problem solving 3 environmental health efforts should be holistic and interdisciplinary and 4 technological advances along with coordinated action across educational business social and political spheres offer great hope for protecting environmental health This workshop report is an informational document that provides a summary of the regional meeting Pathways to Urban Sustainability National Research Council, Policy and Global Affairs, Science and Technology for Sustainability Program, Committee on Regional Approaches to Urban Sustainability, 2011-06-14 The U S population is more than 80 percent urban Recognizing that many metropolitan areas in the United States have been experimenting with various approaches to sustainability and that despite the differences among regions there are likely some core similarities and transferable knowledge Roundtable members selected the metropolitan Atlanta Georgia region as a case study The Atlanta region provided a compelling example for exploring urban sustainability issues because of the region's rapid growth rate well documented challenges with water land use and transportation and its level of engagement with federal government agencies on matters related to sustainability Pathways to Urban Sustainability Lessons from the Atlanta Metropolitan Region Summary of a Workshop explores the Atlanta region's approach to urban sustainability with an emphasis on building evidence based foundation upon which policies and programs might be developed The two day workshop held on September 30 and October 1 2010 examined how the interaction of various systems natural and human systems energy water and transportation systems affect the region's social economic and environmental conditions The intent of this workshop summary is to analyze a metropolitan region so that researchers and practitioners can improve their understanding of the spatial and temporal aspects of urban sustainability Rebuilding the Unity of Health and the Environment in Rural America Institute of Medicine, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, Roundtable on Environmental Health Sciences, Research, and

Medicine,2006-03-28 Throughout much of its history the United States was predominantly a rural society The need to provide sustenance resulted in many people settling in areas where food could be raised for their families Over the past century however a quiet shift from a rural to an urban society occurred such that by 1920 for the first time more members of our society lived in urban regions than in rural ones This was made possible by changing agricultural practices No longer must individuals raise their own food and the number of person hours and acreage required to produce food has steadily been decreasing because of technological advances according to Roundtable member James Merchant of the University of Iowa The Institute of Medicine s Roundtable on Environmental Health Science Research and Medicine held a regional workshop at the University of Iowa on November 29 and 30 2004 to look at rural environmental health issues Iowa with its expanse of rural land area growing agribusiness aging population and increasing immigrant population provided an opportunity to explore environmental health in a region of the country that is not as densely populated As many workshop participants agreed the shifting agricultural practices as the country progresses from family operations to large scale corporate farms will have impacts on environmental health This report describes and summarizes the participants presentations to the Roundtable members and the discussions that the members had with the presenters and participants at the workshop Rebuilding the Unity of Health and the Environment Institute of Medicine,Board on Health Sciences Policy,Roundtable on Environmental Health Sciences, Research, and Medicine,2005-02-27 Houston is struggling with many of the environmental problems that most of the nation s major metropolitan areas are struggling with transportation water and air pollution flooding and major demographic changes Therefore Houston provided an excellent site for a regional meeting on the relationship between environment and health The purpose of this workshop in Houston was to bring all the stakeholders together the private and public sector along with representatives of the diverse communities in Houston to discuss the impact of the natural built and social environments on human health Rebuilding the Unity of Health and the Environment summarizes the presentations and discussions of this workshop The lessons one may draw from this meeting s presentations and discussions apply to other regions that are undergoing similar changes and that must also contend as does Houston with the legacies of insufficient planning environmentally deficient planning or sometimes no planning at all Environmental Health Perspectives ,2000 Books in Print Supplement ,2002 Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists ,1970-06 The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists is the premier public resource on scientific and technological developments that impact global security Founded by Manhattan Project Scientists the Bulletin s iconic Doomsday Clock stimulates solutions for a safer world The British National Bibliography Arthur James Wells,2002 Resources in Education ,1997 Directory of Published Proceedings ,1995 Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists ,1980-01 The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists is the premier public resource on scientific and technological developments that impact global security Founded by Manhattan Project Scientists the Bulletin s iconic Doomsday Clock stimulates solutions for a safer world Government
