Parallel Discourses Kipton E. Jensen,2012-01-24 Animated by the belief that public health programs in Botswana or other parts of sub Saharan Africa would be more effective if those who designed and implemented them possessed a better understanding of existing ethno medical as well as religious beliefs and cultural practices Parallel Discourses provides a revised topology of religious identity in Botswana and then shows why it is important to disaggregate or otherwise distinguish between diverse faith based communities from traditional African religions and African Independent Churches to mainline Christian denominations and Muslim communities when designing or implementing faith based HIV prevention programs It also describes the identity politics at work within various faith communities as well as between the faith sector and public health officials And while it may be true that there have existed parallel if not competing discourses on HIV and AIDS in Botswana between the public health sector and the faith sector or between traditional healers and allopathic physicians each with their own paradigms of authority and evidence these strands of discourse are as suggested throughout this book amenable to a dialogical rapprochement Interweaving parallel discourses on HIV and AIDS is itself instrumental to the implementation of increasingly effective HIV prevention programs enhanced HIV diagnostic capacities and better care for PLWHA People Living with HIV and AIDS Though these essays focus on the many obstacles to collaboration between faith communities and the public health sector in Botswana they also suggest common ground for increasingly collaborative and effective faith based HIV prevention interventions
