GOD'S FIFTH COLUMN

a biography of the age: 1890-1940

WILLIAM GERHARDIE

Edited and with an introduction by

Michael Holroyd &

Robert Skidelsky

GOD'S FIFTH COLUMN is the last book of William Gerhardie who died in 1977 in his eighty-second year. Well known in the 1920s and 1930s chiefly as a novelist (whose books were admired by Arnold Bennett, Graham Greene, Evelyn Waugh and others), Gerhardie fell mysteriously silent at the beginning of the Second World War and did not publish another book during the remaining thirty-seven years of his life.

After his death the manuscript of this ambitious and unusual book was discovered among his papers and has been skilfully edited for publication by Michael Holroyd and Robert Skidelsky. It is a biography of the age, 1890-1940, through which Gerhardie lived. 'If I were the Unknown Soldier,' he wrote, 'my ghost would refuse to lie down under the heavy piece of marble; I would arise, and I would say to them: keep your blasted memorial and learn sense!' The suffering unit was Gerhardie's measure of the crimes and follies of nations, and his criticism of orthodox historians was that they reduced the generals and statesmen, reducing the calculations of the masses. For Gerhardie, it is the artists, the men of imagination rather than of will, who are the true spokesmen for mankind, and it is through the artist's vision and the writer's use of language that he tries to bring the age into moral perspective.

Gerhardie conceived God's Fifth Column as the novel here that subdues man's complexity and makes progress possible. Faith, hope, charity and mercy are the four columns in God's army; the fifth is drive discontent. The Roman, like a fifth column agent himself, enters the world surreptitiously and gains here through translation. Australia: the absurdity of Queen Victoria, impress of more than half the world, defending her heartlands rug from the footstep of India; the fragility of Tatters; gentle of love, living from his wife; the guilty of Chelton's funeral; his coffin arriving in a truck marked 'The Oyster'. The incidents and personalities are subtly linked through contrast and parallel to make GOD'S FIFTH COLUMN one of the most remarkable works of this ghost writer.
