them to claim more than they are justifiably entitled to from the global economy In Tax Cooperation in an Unjust World Allison Christians and Laurens van Apeldoorn show how this presently accepted reality both facilitates and feeds off continued human suffering and therefore violates conceptions of international distributive justice They examine two principles that govern tax cooperation across states and explain how the current international tax order impedes their realization They then show how states could work toward fulfilling the principles and building a fairer international tax system via incremental yet effective adaptation of key international tax norms and rules Examining the Federal Tax Treatment of Health Care Benefits Provided by Tribal Governments to Their Citizens United States.
