Feed Into Milk: a New Applied Feeding System for Dairy Cows C. Thomas, 2023-07-24 Strategic research in ruminant nutrition has greatly improved our understanding of the processes involved in the conversion of feed to milk However the lack of an up to date framework to incorporate this knowledge into support systems has meant that much of the technology has not been transferred into practice in a way that can aid the sustainability of milk production systems The aim of Feed into Milk FiM was to develop this framework in close collaboration with the dairy support industry so that an improved nutritional model could be applied with immediate effect The project comprised reviews and evaluations of current relevant information on feeding systems a joint modelling animal experiment and feed evaluation approach to deriving an improved diet formulation system and the construction of an improved applied nutrition model to meet the future needs of the dairy farmer and the feed industry This advisory manual is one of the main outcomes of the project and is aimed at consultants research workers academics and students of animal nutrition This manual explains the background and principles involved in deriving the FiM system and provides the rationale and the equations for the prediction of intake and the calculation of the requirements and supply of energy and protein In addition the manual recognizes that an applied feeding system is only part of the process of diet formulation and provides a series of decision support systems DSS to assist in building rations for dairy cows The accompanying CD explains the principles of diet formulation and provides examples on the use of the DSS The complete set of equations is listed in software format and this together with an extensive feed database enables the user to begin formulating diets with almost immediate effect

Indiana Farmer's Guide ,1921 Responses in the Yield of Milk Constituents to the Intake of Nutrients by Dairy Cows Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (Great Britain). Technical Committee on Responses to Nutrients,1998 This report reviews the energy and protein requirement systems for dairy cows currently used in Britain and presents a new approach along with the outline of a model for its implementation Current systems give little consideration to the responses of the animal to changes in the nutrient supply or to interactions between dietary constituents in their effects on digestion and metabolism Neither do they predict any effect on the partition of nutrient use between milk and body or changes in the yields of milk fat protein and lactose which determine the commercial value of the milk Therefore the systems although not inaccurate lack relevance to the current needs of UK milk producers Models which embody concepts of nutrient supply and utilization are reviewed and their development as viable alternatives is considered It is concluded that a new diet formulation system for dairy cows should aim to predict voluntary feed intake the partition of nutrient use between milk production and tissue deposition and the short and long term of effects of nutrition on fat protein and lactose yields The physical and biological characteristics of the cow must also be recognized and incorporated into any model for response prediction The report is also published in Nutrition Abstracts and Reviews Series B Livestock Feeds and Feeding It is an authoritative review for advanced students research workers and advisers in animal nutrition and in dairy science and technology
