agro technological development create different social roles for technology developers and farmers in innovation processes and production systems Case studies of projects and international research centres in India Peru and Mexico provide an insight in the different approaches to agro technological development in which farmers are treated as recipients of technology or are involved as co innovators and in which technology developers present themselves as solution providers or as service providers Insight in those different approaches contributes to a clearer debate on the potential role of biotechnology in agricultural development and the reduction of poverty Third World Resource Directory, 1994-1995
