Female Genital Cutting Elizabeth Heger Boyle, 2003-04-30 The practice of female genital cutting sometimes referred to as female circumcision and common in a number of African states has attracted increasing attention in recent years and mobilized strong international opposition While it typically produces a visceral response of horror and revulsion in Westerners the practice is widely regarded in some cultures as essential for proper development into womanhood and is defended by women who have themselves experienced it and who have had the procedure performed on their own daughters It is also perceived in many Islamic communities as religiously prescribed although most Islamic clerics do not condone the practice In this study sociologist Elizabeth Boyle examines this controversial issue from the perspectives of the international system governments and individuals Drawing on previous scholarship records of international organizations demographic surveys and the popular media Boyle examines how the issue is perceived and acted upon at international national and individual levels Grounding her work in the sociological theory of neoinstitutionalism Boyle describes how the choices made by governments and individual women are influenced by the often conflicting principles of individual human rights and sovereign autonomy She concludes that while globalization may exacerbate such conflicts it can ultimately lead to social change

...And the Diamonds Were Taken... O. Mark Eda, 2019-10-30 To cut is to humiliate for no particular reason but for the satisfaction of the few that seemed not to show human feelings for those being humiliated Allowing genital mutilation to be practiced in any part of the universe is to say that civilization that was fought for by our ancestors has no relevance in today's realism The human body should always be respected and kept whole especially for the fact that it is known biblically that we are created in the image of the Almighty God and should not be tampered with under any condition or circumstance just to please the interests of certain class of people hiding behind the rhetoric of cultures and customs only in self realization of their personal satisfaction Nothing can compare to the way our children and women are being relegated to the punishment emanating from this inhuman gesture To continue allowing this treacherous ancient act being meted on humans in the 21st Century is to make irrelevant and a thing of mockery the entire purpose behind civilization
