The Women's Squad in Ukraine's protests:

Feminism, nationalism, and militarism on the Maidan

ABSTRACT

Although women and men participated in nearly equal numbers in Ukraine's 2013–14 Maidan protests, women were excluded from some of the more dangerous activities and their contributions went largely unrecognized. I examine women's modes of participation in and their exclusion from the Maidan and the creative responses of feminists to this exclusion, including creation of so-called Women's Squads. The protests generated important feminist initiatives and discourses about women's roles in Ukraine's past and future, which were partially couched in discourses of nationalism and militarism. Examining debates about women's roles during and after the protests suggests that the Maidan provided Ukraine's feminists with opportunities to articulate divergent yet reconcilable perspectives on women's activism, social change, and national sovereignty. Their creative responses to the challenges of the protests have potentially paved the way for broadening the base of Ukrainian feminism, introducing women's rights principles to segments of the population previously reluctant to embrace feminism. [Ukraine, women, feminism, protest, Shincha Solnis, militarism, nationalism, Maidan]

January 28, 2014. It is bitterly cold in Kyiv, Ukraine's capital city and site of massive political protests. (Tomorrow will be the coldest day of the year so far, dipping down to minus nine degrees Fahrenheit.) A male voice is heard from the stage in Kyiv's Maidan Nezalezhnosti (Independence Square), where thousands are gathered: "According to statistics, there are fewer males in Ukraine than females, especially since the 1920s. Yet of course, the responsibility of every real man is to defend those who are weaker—women, children, our elderly parents." But Maria Berlins'ka, who will now speak from the stage, has other ideas.

Berlins'ka steps to the microphone, which has a blue-and-yellow Ukrainian flag tied around it. She is dressed in a long red coat and a black ukhanka, a traditional fur hat with earflaps most commonly worn by men. She explains that she is a historian and, therefore, is well aware of the important roles women in Ukraine have played in state formation. She gives examples of the crucial roles women have been playing in the ongoing Maidan protests. A few days ago, however, when several protesters were shot and violence erupted, women were turned away from the barricades.

Berlins'ka continues,

In the New Ukraine, the Ukraine for which we are fighting, there is no room for discrimination. Women, as well as men, make up the people's militia. (Just like the men) they also stack cobblestones, carry the wounded, build the barricades and stand on the front lines. I understand that by turning women away some men are trying to protect us. But don't "protect" someone by taking away their freedom of movement ... You can't force your protection on someone. If an adult, rights-bearing person consciously decides to go to the center of the action to fight for her people—that is her holy, sacred right. True protection lies not in prohibition, but in cooperation ... We are obligated to accept as equal all rights-bearing, conscious, adult citizens who are ready to stand and defend their freedom ... this is a basic human right.¹
