being Aim of this concept is to identify and mobilize available resources for health promotion which exist in the target population and their setting In addition the investment for health model is suggested requiring a participatory approach of cooperate programme development by including project partners representatives of the target group stakeholders from evaluated politics and scientists The WHO approach is expected particularly to reduce socioeconomic inequalities in health Objectives The objective of this paper is to contribute to the clarification when costs of health asset assessment and participatory project development should be included in programme costing In addition some empirical data from an ongoing study evaluating a health promotion intervention aiming at increasing physical activity of socially disadvantaged women are presented in order to illustrate that the resulting differences in programme costs may be substantial Methodology Essentially it will be argued that whether or not costs of health assets assessment and participatory project development should be included in programme costing by programme evaluation Roughly three types of decisions should be distinguished 1 the same programme should be performed in other similar settings 2 in other similar settings programmes aiming at the same programme objectives should be developed and 3 in other places or settings the full health assets approach should be applied in order to develop new health promotion programmes for the targeted population A straightforward implication for costing is a careful splitting into the project phases of asset assessment programme design and programme implementation thus taking into account the specific requirements of the health asset concept and the participatory approach Different components of costs are to be considered in each phase asset assessment personnel and non personnel costs of assessing activities e g interviews with members of the target group identification of the assets programme design personnel and non personnel costs of developmental activities of all persons and groups involved e g costs of needs assessment time costs of workshops and meetings travelling costs and programme implementation personnel and non personnel costs of recruiting participants e g costs of posters flyers and other marketing activities and finally costs of the programme itself e g rent for the gym trainer childcare sports material Results Dependent on the scope of costing total programme costs varied substantially The costs of programme implementation amounted to 44 700 Adding the costs for developing the programme design coming to 47 300 results in total costs of 92 000 adding on top of that the costs of asset assessment running to 35 600 would total up to 127 600 In consequence the incremental cost effectiveness ratio of the programme will be rather sensitive with regard to a variation of the scope of costing Conclusion Depending on whether or not costs of asset assessment and costs of programme design development are included in programme costing total costs and hence the ICER of a preventive intervention could differ considerably Therefore the identification of the decision context is of crucial importance for the validity of an economic programme evaluation

century ago health services absorbed few resources and provided little benefit. Since then advances in medical knowledge and techniques have escalated both the benefits and the costs. The affordability of health services is being questioned in even the richest countries and the economic aspects of health policy have become ever more intrusive. Australia is no exception with its health system now absorbing 19% of all government tax revenue. Familiarity with economic issues such as how to assess health outcomes, how to assign resources efficiently and what financial arrangements will promote equity as well as efficiency is essential to understanding health policy. This is especially so at a time when the economics of health care are being internationally re-examined with new forms of competition, challenges to public ownership and case mix funding of hospitals under scrutiny and a re-evaluation of the benefits of pharmaceuticals and new technologies underway. Economics and Australian Health Policy offers this understanding to readers with and without formal economic training. It starts with an introduction to both the economic way of thinking about health systems and the context in which those economic questions are raised, the structure of the Australian health system, its culture and its patterns of financial flows. It then describes and appraises from an economic perspective the major components of the system and the policy issues which arise. This collection has been specially commissioned to address both Australia's most pressing policy issues and the needs of public health and health economic policy makers, academics, commentators and students. The list of contributors reads like a who's who in Australian health economics who have been encouraged clearly successfully to write accessibly yet with authority and conviction.
