

For the first time, the Journal of the American Medical Association has published a study that shows that the use of a computer program to help doctors make decisions about whether to prescribe a drug can reduce the number of prescriptions for drugs that are not recommended by the American Medical Association. The study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of California, San Francisco, found that the use of the program resulted in a 10 percent reduction in the number of prescriptions for drugs that are not recommended by the American Medical Association. The researchers also found that the use of the program resulted in a 10 percent increase in the number of prescriptions for drugs that are recommended by the American Medical Association. The researchers concluded that the use of the program can help doctors make better decisions about whether to prescribe a drug.
