Archaeologies of the Heart Kisha Supernant,Jane Eva Baxter,Natasha Lyons,Sonya Atalay,2020-02-13 Archaeological practice is currently shifting in response to feminist indigenous activist community based and anarchic critiques of how archaeology is practiced and how science is used to interpret the past lives of people Inspired by the calls for a different way of doing archaeology this volume presents a case here for a heart centered archaeological practice Heart centered practice emerged in care based disciplines such as nursing and various forms of therapy as a way to recognize the importance of caring for those on whom we work and as an avenue to explore how our interactions with others impacts our own emotions and heart Archaeologists are disciplined to separate mind and heart a division which harkens back to the origins of western thought The dualism between the mental and the physical is fundamental to the concept that humans can objectively study the world without being immersed in it Scientific approaches to understanding the world assume there is an objective world to be studied and that humans must remove themselves from that world in order to find the truth An archaeology of the heart rejects this dualism rather we see mind body heart and spirit as inextricable An archaeology of the heart provides a new space for thinking through an integrated responsible and grounded archaeology where there is care for the living and the dead acknowledges the need to build responsible relationships with communities and with the archaeological record and emphasize the role of rigor in how work and research is conducted The contributions bring together archaeological practitioners from across the globe in different contexts to explore how heart centered practice can impact archaeological theory methodology and research throughout the discipline

Poison Arrows David E. Jones, 2022-02-24 A comprehensive survey of organic compounds used as poisons on arrows and spears in food and even as insecticides by numerous Native American tribes. Biological warfare is a menacing twenty-first century issue but its origins extend to antiquity. While the recorded use of toxins in warfare in some ancient populations is rarely disputed, the use of arsenical smoke in China which dates to at least 1000 BC for example, the use of poison arrows and other deadly substances by Native American groups has been fraught with contradiction. At last, revealing clear documentation to support these theories, anthropologist David Jones transforms the realm of ethnobotany in Poison Arrows. Examining evidence within the few extant descriptive accounts of Native American warfare along with grooved arrowheads and clues from botanical knowledge, Jones builds a solid case to indicate widespread and very effective use of many types of toxins. He argues that various groups applied them to not only warfare but also to hunting and even as an early form of insect extermination. Culling extensive ethnological, historical and archaeological data, Jones provides a thoroughly comprehensive survey of the use of ethnobotanical and entomological compounds applied in wide-ranging ways including homicide and suicide. Although many narratives from the contact period in North America deny such uses, Jones now offers conclusive documentation to prove otherwise. A groundbreaking study of a subject that has been long overlooked, Poison Arrows imparts an extraordinary new perspective to the history of warfare, weaponry and deadly human ingenuity. A unique contribution to the field of American Indian ethnology. This information has never been compiled before and I doubt that many ethnologists in the field have ever suspected the extent to which poison was used among North American Indians. This book significantly extends our understanding. Wayne Van Horne, Associate Professor of Anthropology, Kennesaw State University.

What's to Eat? Nathalie Cooke, 2009-09-01 How we as Canadians procure, produce, cook, consume and think about food creates our cuisine and our nation of immigrant traditions has produced a distinctive and evolving repertoire that is neither hodgepodge nor smorgasbord. Contributors who come from the diverse worlds of universities, museums, the media and gastronomy look at Canada's distinctive foodways from the shared perspective of the current moment. Individual chapters explore food items and choices from those made by Canada's First Nations and early settlers to those made today. Other contributions describe the ways in which foods enjoyed by early Canadians have found their way back onto Canadian tables in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Authors emphasize the expressive potential of food practices and food texts: cookbooks are more than books to be read and used in the kitchen; they are also documents that convey valuable social and historical information.

Local, Traditional and Indigenous Food Systems in the 21st Century to Combat Obesity, Undernutrition and Climate Change, 2nd edition Rebecca Kanter, Sofia Boza, Gina Kennedy, 2023-07-31. Traditional and indigenous food systems have existed for centuries and were in balance with local food supplies globally. However, between the mid-20th and early 21st century, the green revolution dramatically altered food production, which in turn affected the inclusivity of traditional production systems within food systems and subsequently traditional dietary intakes. This change was accompanied by lifestyle changes and spurred a global nutrition transition. Today, the world faces a global syndemic of obesity, undernutrition, and climate change. A new call to action to create food systems that nourish people and sustain the planet is needed. Traditional and indigenous food systems have long been recognized as systems that can both support good human nutrition as well as maintain a balance with nature. There is an underutilized knowledge base around traditional and indigenous food systems. This includes the knowledge of nutritious species, traditional culinary preparations, and cultural practices. Greater agricultural production of underutilized species can result in more sustainable agricultural and food systems, which can also help improve livelihoods and food security. Traditional and indigenous cultural practices with respect to both land and water management, as well as culinary practices, contribute to both sustainable food production and consumption. These practices require a greater evidence base in order to be incorporated into public health nutrition initiatives related to improving dietary quality, such as food-based dietary guidelines, for example. An increased focus on the importance of local traditional and indigenous food systems and nutrition could therefore help countries to improve human nutrition and ideally help mitigate the global syndemic of obesity, undernutrition, and climate change. This Research Topic will focus on documenting diverse local food systems and promoting elements within them that can help improve nutrition and health, both human and planetary, in various ways, including the livelihood development of knowledge holders.
