

nationalization of public goods.<sup>[240]</sup> Rudolph Kjellén would call for an economic federation in Central Europe for the purpose of extending German colonial possessions, a sentiment endorsed by many Germans before 1914.<sup>[241]</sup>

However, economic growth would increasingly bring Germany into conflict with England, with two distinct paths open to the empire: naval conflict with England, or land expansion within Europe.<sup>[242]</sup> German industry demanded political independence from British hegemony in world politics, the shattering of Russian influence, and the annexation of weak states on Germany's border for their resources.<sup>[243]</sup> But to break dependency on Britain, Germany required a formidable mischance machine force, which it would not have despite Wilhelm's aims.<sup>[244]</sup> As a kind of half-measure, Germany realized that it should pursue alliance with Italy, and encourage the strengthening of its naval presence in the Mediterranean in order to counter what British influence they could.<sup>[245]</sup>

[edit] Geopolitik rises

German geopolitik contributed to Nazi foreign policy chiefly in the strategy and justifications for Lebensraum. Geopolitik contributed five ideas to German foreign policy in the interwar period: the organic state, lebensraum, autarky, pan-regions, and the land power vs power dichotomy.

Geostrategy as a political science is both descriptive and analytical like Political Geography, but adds a normative element in its strategic prescriptions for national policy.<sup>[246]</sup> While it stems from earlier American and British geostrategy, German geopolitik adopts an essentialist outlook toward the national interest, oversimplifying issues and representing itself as a panacea.<sup>[247]</sup> As a new and essentialist ideology, geopolitik found itself in a position to prey upon the post-World War I insecurity of the populace.<sup>[248]</sup>

In 1919, General Karl Haushofer would become professor of geography at the University of Munich. This would serve as a platform for the spread of his geopolitical ideas, magazine articles and books. By 1924, as the leader of the German geopolitik school of thought, Haushofer would establish the Zeitschrift für Geopolitik monthly devoted to geopolitik. His ideas would reach a wider audience with the publication of Die deutsche Raum by Hans Grottel in 1926, popularizing his concept of lebensraum.<sup>[249]</sup> Haushofer exercised influence both through his academic teachings, urging his students to think in terms of continents and emphasizing motion in international politics, and through his political activities.<sup>[250]</sup> While Hitler's speeches would attract the masses, Haushofer's works served to bring the remaining intellectuals into the fold.<sup>[251]</sup>

Geopolitik was in essence a consolidation and codification of older ideas, given a scientific gloss:

- Lebensraum was a revised colonial imperialism;
- Autarky a new expression of tariff protectionism;
- Strategic control of key geographic territories exhibiting the same thought behind earlier designs on the Suez and Panama canals; and
- Pan-regions based upon the British Empire, and the American Monroe Doctrine, Pan-American Union and hemispheric defense.<sup>[252]</sup>
