Abstract

Political science has for some time been afflicted with an existential and empirical angst concerning impact and relevance. This is by no means a new or unique disciplinary pathology, but it is one that has intensified in recent years. The reasons for this intensification have been explored in a burgeoning literature on 'the tyranny of impact'. The central argument of this article is that a focus on the 'relevance gap' within political science, and vis-à-vis the social sciences more generally, risks failing to comprehend the emergence of a far broader and multifaceted 'expectations gap'. The core argument and contribution of this article is that the future of political science will depend on the politics and management of the 'expectations gap' that has emerged. Put slightly differently, the study of politics needs to have a sharper grasp of the politics of its own discipline and the importance of framing, positioning, connecting vis-à-vis the broader social context.

In a recent article in European Political Science Capano and Verzichelli (2016; see also 2010) explored the structural and contextual factors underlying political science's 'relevance gap'. As a rich seam of scholarship illustrates, debates about the origins, present and future of political science have to some extent dominated the discipline from its inception (see, for example, Farr, 1988; Almond, 1990; King
