P. West,      Projective Geometry Oswald Veblen, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1910 edition Excerpt The coordinates of a double point  $xv$   $x$  must satisfy the equations  $px_1 ax_1 bx_2 px cx_1 dx$  These equations are compatible only if the determinant of the system  $3 a p c_1 bx_2 0 cx_1 d p x 0$  vanishes This leads to the equation  $a p b I c d p$  for the determination of the factor of proportionality  $p$  This equation is called the characteristic equation of the matrix representing the projectivity Every value of  $p$  satisfying this equation then leads to a double point when substituted in one of the equations 3 viz if  $p$  be a solution of the characteristic equation the point  $xv$   $ag b a pl d pv c$  is a double point In homogeneous coordinates the cross ratio  $R AB CD$  of four points  $A av a_3 B bv ft_2 C cv c_2 D dv d$  is given by  $ac be ad bd$  where the expressions  $ac$  etc are used as abbreviations for  $a a$  etc This statement is readily verified by writing down the above ratio in terms of the nonhomogeneous coordinates of the four points We will close this section by giving to the two homogeneous coordinates of a point on a line an explicit geometrical significance In view of the fact that the coordinates of such a point are not uniquely determined a factor of proportionality being entirely arbitrary there may be many such interpretations On account of the existence of this arbitrary factor we may impose a further condition on the coordinates  $x_1, x_2$  of a point in addition to the defining relation  $x_1^2 + x_2^2 = x^2$  where  $x$  is the nonhomogeneous coordinate of the point in question We choose the relation  $x_1^2 + x_2^2 = 1$  If this relation is satisfied Thus homogeneous coordinates subject to the condition  $x_1^2 + x_2^2 = 1$  can be defined by choosing three points A B C arbitrarily
