

*To the People of the United States.
FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS,*

THE period for a new election of a Citizen, to administer the executive government of the United States, being not far distant, and the time actually arrived, when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person, who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation, which binds a dutiful citizen to his country : and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no disposition of real or fictitious interest : no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness : but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

Why was George Washington's Farewell Address Important?

George Washingtons Farewell Address

George Washington's Farewell Address:

A Sacred Union of Citizens Matthew Spalding, Patrick J. Garrity, 1996 Celebrating the 200th Anniversary of George Washington's Farewell Address Washington's Farewell Address to the People of the United States George Washington, 1812 George Washington's Farewell Address George Washington, 193? The Farewell Address of George Washington George Washington, 1911 General George Washington's Farewell Address to the Citizens of the United States of America, 1812 Washington's Farewell Address, 1941 George Washington's Farewell Address George Washington, 2025-02-24 George Washington's Farewell Address published in 1796 is a landmark in United States history where Washington announced that he would not seek a third term as president. Written with the assistance of Alexander Hamilton, the address was first published in the American Daily Advertiser on September 19, 1796. By choosing to retire from public life, Washington set a precedent for future presidents. The address covers several crucial themes. Washington emphasized the importance of national unity, warning against the dangers of division that could weaken the nation. He also advocated for a policy of neutrality regarding international conflicts, advising the U.S. to avoid permanent alliances that might drag the country into unnecessary wars. The formation of political parties was another concern, seen as a potential source of internal discord. Washington underscored the relevance of religion and morality to social and political well-being, arguing that these virtues are essential for public order. He also cautioned against the dangers of excessive public debt, which could jeopardize the country's financial independence and freedom. Furthermore, he encouraged the promotion of education and knowledge to ensure the liberty and prosperity of the United States. The legacy of the address includes the establishment of the two-term presidential tradition, which lasted until Franklin D. Roosevelt and was later codified in the 22nd Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Farewell Address continues to influence discussions about foreign policy, the nature of political parties, and the importance of national unity, reflecting Washington's vision and leadership in the nation's early years. Washington's Farewell Address to the People of the United States George Washington, 2014-09-18 In September 1796, worn out by the burdens of the presidency and attacks of political foes, George Washington announced his decision not to seek a third term. With the assistance of Alexander Hamilton and James Madison, Washington composed in a Farewell Address his political testament to the nation. Designed to inspire and guide future generations, the address also set forth Washington's defense of his administration's record and embodied a classic statement of Federalist doctrine. Washington's principal concern was for the safety of the eight-year-old Constitution. He believed that the stability of the Republic was threatened by the forces of geographical sectionalism, political factionalism, and interference by foreign powers in the nation's domestic affairs. He urged Americans to subordinate sectional jealousies to common national interests. Writing at a time before political parties had become accepted as vital, extra-constitutional opinion-focusing agencies, Washington feared that they carried the seeds of the nation's destruction through petty factionalism. Although

Washington was in no sense the father of American isolationism since he recognized the necessity of temporary associations for extraordinary emergencies he did counsel against the establishment of permanent alliances with other countries connections that he warned would inevitably be subversive of America's national interest Washington did not publicly deliver his Farewell Address It first appeared on September 19 1796 in the Philadelphia Daily American Advertiser and then in papers around the country In January 1862 with the Constitution endangered by civil war a thousand citizens of Philadelphia petitioned Congress to commemorate the forthcoming 130th anniversary of George Washington's birth by providing that the Farewell Address of Washington be read aloud on the morning of that day in one or the other of the Houses of Congress Both houses agreed and assembled in the House of Representatives chamber on February 22 1862 where Secretary of the Senate John W Forney rendered The Farewell Address very effectively as one observer recalled The practice of reading the Farewell Address did not immediately become a tradition The address was first read in regular legislative sessions of the Senate in 1888 and the House in 1899 The House continued the practice until 1984 Since 1893 the Senate has observed Washington's birthday by selecting one of its members to read the Farewell Address The assignment alternates between members of each political party At the conclusion of each reading the appointed senator inscribes his or her name and brief remarks in a black leather bound book maintained by the secretary of the Senate
