Economic Evaluation And Health Promotion:

Economic Evaluation and Health Promotion Ceri Phillips, 1997-01-01 Provides a framework for assessing the relative efficiency of health promotion compared with other health care activities and the extent to which health promotion activities themselves are efficient It establishes the basis for economic evaluations in health promotion and explores the methodological issues of relevance to health promotion agencies in formulating future strategies Evaluating Health Promotion Margaret Thorogood, Yolande Coombes, 2010 The third edition of this highly successful book has been fully revised and updated to reflect the ongoing developments in the field of health promotion to help those in health promotion choose and implement accurate reliable and evidence based evaluation methods Economic Evaluation of Health Promotion Jeffrey Ralph James Richardson, 1995 Evaluation in Health Promotion Irving Rootman, 2001 This book is the result of the WHO European Working Group on Health Promotion Evaluation which examined the current range of qualitative and quantitative evaluation methods to provide guidance to policy makers and practitioners It includes an extensive c

being Aim of this concept is to identify and mobilize available resources for health promotion which exist in the target population and their setting In addition the investment for health model is suggested requiring a participatory approach of cooperate programme development by including project partners representatives of the target group stakeholders from evaluated politics and scientists The WHO approach is expected particularly to reduce socioeconomic inequalities in health Objectives The objective of this paper is to contribute to the clarification when costs of health asset assessment and participatory project development should be included in programme costing In addition some empirical data from an ongoing study evaluating a health promotion intervention aiming at increasing physical activity of socially disadvantaged women are presented in order to illustrate that the resulting differences in programme costs may be substantial Methodology Essentially it will be argued that whether or not costs of health assets assessment and participatory project development should be included in programme costing by programme evaluation Roughly three types of decisions should be distinguished 1 the same programme should be performed in other similar settings 2 in other similar settings programmes aiming at the same programme objectives should be developed and 3 in other places or settings the full health assets approach should be applied in order to develop new health promotion programmes for the targeted population A straightforward implication for costing is a careful splitting into the project phases of asset assessment programme design and programme implementation thus taking into account the specific requirements of the health asset concept and the participatory approach Different components of costs are to be considered in each phase asset assessment personnel and non personnel costs of assessing activities e g interviews with members of the target group identification of the assets programme design personnel and non personnel costs of developmental activities of all persons and groups involved e g costs of needs assessment time costs of workshops and meetings travelling costs and programme implementation personnel and non personnel costs of recruiting participants e g costs of posters flyers and other marketing activities and finally costs of the programme itself e g rent for the gym trainer childcare sports material Results Dependent on the scope of costing total programme costs varied substantially The costs of programme implementation amounted to 44 700 Adding the costs for developing the programme design coming to 47 300 results in total costs of 92 000 adding on top of that the costs of asset assessment running to 35 600 would total up to 127 600 In consequence the incremental cost effectiveness ratio of the programme will be rather sensitive with regard to a variation of the scope of costing Conclusion Depending on whether or not costs of asset assessment and costs of programme design development are included in programme costing total costs and hence the ICER of a preventive intervention could differ considerably Therefore the identification of the decision context is of crucial importance for the validity of an economic programme evaluation health promotion and education are desperately needed Convincing policy decision makers to invest in health promotion and education programs it is needed to show its effectiveness Health promotion and education professionals are expected to construct evidence of health promotion and education Most of such evidence has been produced in the US and European countries Because socio economic conditions differ between the Asia and Western countries we cannot depend on such evidence to implement adequate health promotion and education in our region We must produce and accumulate our own evidence based on Asian perspectives Promoting Health, Preventing Disease The Economic Case OECD, World Health Organization, 2015-10-29 A growing body of evidence from economic studies shows areas where appropriate policies can generate health and other benefits at an affordable cost sometimes reducing health expenditure and helping to redress health inequalities at the same time Economic Evaluation Julia Fox-Rushby, John Cairns, 2005-11-16 There are so many ways in which health might be improved today and as technology improves the opportunities will increase However there are limits to budgets as well as other resources so choices have to be made about what to spend money and time on Economic evaluation can help set out the value of the costs and benefits from competing choices This book examines how to undertake economic evaluation of health care interventions in low middle and high income countries It covers Ways in which economic evaluations might be structured Approaches to measuring and valuing costs and effects Interpreting and presenting evidence Appraising the quality and usefulness of economic evaluations Series Editors Rosalind Plowman and Nicki Thorogood

The Future for Health Promotion Colin Palfrey, 2018-05-02 Does health promotion have a lasting and positive effect on people With mounting pressure to reduce costs to the NHS and increasing scepticism of the so called nanny state health promotion initiatives are increasingly being criticised as costly and ineffective with many arguing that health inequalities can only be reduced through radical political and economic change This book examines the methods used to evaluate the value of health promotion projects and determines whether attempts to change people s lifestyles have proved successful Taking into account the practical and ethical issues involved in deciding the appropriate approach to take in efforts to reduce health inequalities the book assesses what might be the best path forward for health promotion Evaluating Improvement And Implementation For Health Ovretveit, John, 2014-08-01 This book examines different approaches to evaluating treatment health service delivery public health programmes and policy implementation Researching Health Promotion Stephen Platt, Jonathan Watson, 2002-09-09 Providing a critical review of the current state of health promotion research This book re conceptualises the field of health promotion as collaborative and integrating enterprise rather than as a battlefield for disciplinary and intellectual clashes It makes a significant contribution to ongoing epistemological theoretical and methodological debates in health promotion research With contributors from Sweden Switzerland Denmark Ireland the UK and the US Researching Health Promotion will be of interest to students and professionals working in health promotion public health medicine and health policy Economics and Australian Health Policy Gavin Mooney, 2020-08-26 A century ago health services absorbed few resources and provided little benefit. Since then advances in medical knowledge and techniques have escalated both the benefits and the costs. The affordability of health services is being questioned in even the richest countries and the economic aspects of health policy have become ever more intrusive. Australia is no exception with its health system now absorbing 19% of all government tax revenue. Familiarity with economic issues such as how to assess health outcomes, how to assign resources efficiently and what financial arrangements will promote equity as well as efficiency is essential to understanding health policy. This is especially so at a time when the economics of health care are being internationally re-examined with new forms of competition, challenges to public ownership and case mix funding of hospitals under scrutiny and a re-evaluation of the benefits of pharmaceuticals and new technologies underway. Economics and Australian Health Policy offers this understanding to readers with and without formal economic training. It starts with an introduction to both the economic way of thinking about health systems and the context in which those economic questions are raised, the structure of the Australian health system, its culture and its patterns of financial flows. It then describes and appraises from an economic perspective the major components of the system and the policy issues which arise. This collection has been specially commissioned to address both Australia's most pressing policy issues and the needs of public health and health economic policy makers, academics, commentators and students. The list of contributors reads like a who's who in Australian health economics who have been encouraged clearly successfully to write accessibly yet with authority and conviction.
