Education Policy Implementation:

New Directions in Education Policy Implementation Meredith I. Honig, 2006-07-13 A companion to Allan R Odden's Education Policy Implementation also published by SUNY Press this book presents original work by a new generation of scholars contributing to education policy implementation research The contributors define education policy implementation as the product of the interaction among particular policies people and places Their analyses of previous generations of implementation research reveal that contemporary findings not only build directly on lessons learned from the past but also seek to deepen past findings These contemporary researchers also break from the past by seeking a more nuanced contingent and rigorous theory based explication of how implementation unfolds They argue that researchers and practitioners can help improve education policy implementation by not asking simply what works but rather focusing their attention on what works for whom where when and why

Reforming Special Education Richard Weatherley, 1979 Focusing on Massachusetts innovative special education reform law Chapter 766 Reforming Special Education traces the complex processes through which an ostensibly universalistic and equitable policy can produce a biased distribution of public benefits favoring affluent clients Reforming Special Education examines three Massachusetts school systems and seven schools within those systems to determine whether laws formulated to alter practices in educating children who are deaf blind retarded and physically handicapped actually result in fair and uniform treatment of children with special needs or whether they just create more work for school personnel The book discusses individual and community wealth as factors in the allocation of funds Despite Massachusetts equalizing formula it points out that rich districts often fare better than poor ones because they have the resources and sophistication necessary to challenge funding decisions The book also reveals that bureaucrats who are charged with carrying out the changes are victimized by new laws which for lack of resources they cannot hope to put into effect Because the street level bureaucrats front line personnel develop informal means of coping with these problems and with their jobs they distort the policy they are charged with implementing and become policy makers in their own right Weatherley concludes that policy initiatives must take into account potential effects on the daily work routines of those charged with implementing them These findings have dramatic implications for all human service bureaucracies where front line staff interact with the public hospitals police departments public welfare and employment offices mental health centers and lower courts Students of public policy educators social workers or anyone involved in public service employment will find this a scholarly yet highly readable account of the organizational constraints to bureaucratic reform

Globalizing Education Policy Fazal Rizvi,Bob

Lingard, 2009-12-04 Rizvi and Lingard's account of the global politics of education is thoughtful, complex and compelling. It is the first really comprehensive discussion and analysis of global trends in education policy, their effects, structural and individual, and resistance to them. In the enormous body of writing on globalisation, this book stands out and will become a basic text in education policy courses around the world. Stephen J. Ball, Karl Mannheim Professor of Sociology of Education, Institute of Education, University of London, UK. In what ways have the processes of globalization reshaped the educational policy terrain? How might we analyse education policies located within this new terrain, which is at once local, national, regional and global? In Globalizing Education Policy, the authors explore the key global drivers of policy change in education and suggest that these do not operate in the same way in all nation states. They examine the transformative effects of globalization on the discursive terrain within which educational policies are developed and enacted, arguing that this terrain is increasingly informed by a range of neo-liberal precepts which have fundamentally changed the ways in which we think about educational governance. They also suggest that whilst in some countries these precepts are resisted to some extent, they have nonetheless become hegemonic and provide an overview of some critical issues in educational policy to which this hegemonic view of globalization has given rise, including devolution and decentralization, new forms of governance, the balance between public and private funding of education, access and equity, and the education of girls, curriculum, particularly with respect to the teaching of English language and technology, pedagogies and high stakes testing, and the global trade in education. These issues are explored within the context of major shifts in global processes and ideological discourses currently being experienced and negotiated by all countries. The book also provides an approach to education policy analysis in an age of globalization and will be of interest to those studying globalization and education policy across the social sciences.
