

THE EROSION OF OXFORD

James Stevens Curl

The full impact of this book can only be appreciated when we realise that its lessons could apply not only to Oxford but to almost every town, village and city in Britain.

Oxford is a national treasure. It is also an architectural jewel in the European context, and, in this shrinking world, must be of global importance.

The text and pictures of this book describe in detail the gradual erosion of the physical fabric of one of Britain's major historic cities, and serve as a warning of what might happen in the future. The lessons of the Erosion of Oxford are applicable to many historic centres, and must be learned if anything of worth is to survive for future generations to enjoy.

The message of this profusely illustrated and passionately argued book must be understood by the nation and by the world if the insidious process of the erosion of our heritage is to be stopped. The damage to Oxford in the last half-century has been colossal. A nation or a society that destroys its true inheritance of capital from the past need expect no glorious or even civilised future.

Mr Curl's book is both a warning and a record. It is a book for all who care about the environment in Britain. The fact that it is about Oxford, one of Europe's finest cities, should alarm and alert everyone to the dangers that threaten our heritage.

James Stevens Curl is an Architect, Town Planning Consultant, Architectural Historian and Antiquarian. He is the author of several books and contributes regularly to many journals. He was closely involved with the European Architectural Heritage Year 1975 Campaign as Architect to the Scottish Committee and was for some time the architectural contributor to the Survey of London. He was one of the founders, and first Chairman of, the Oxford Civic Society. He is well known as a lecturer especially in the field of nineteenth-century monumental architecture and is a teacher and broadcaster.

Triumph of the Expert Joseph Morgan Hodge, 2007 Triumph of the Expert is a history of British colonial policy and thinking and its contribution to the emergence of rural development and environmental policies in the late colonial and postcolonial period Tax Law, State-Building and the Constitution Dominic de Cogan, 2020-08-06 This monograph looks at how tax is intertwined with constitutional law and the state in the UK It looks at a variety of topics including tax devolution scrutiny and reform of tax legislation the protection of taxpayers and the domestic legal processing of international rules and problems Tax Law State Building and the Constitution presents and interrogates five key claims First there is a clear overlap between the concerns of tax and constitutional lawyers Secondly the tax system is being deeply affected by the fast pace of constitutional change Thirdly decisions taken in the tax field are likely to have a reverse influence on the evolution of the constitution Fourthly these relationships are heavily context dependent with tax making all the difference to some ongoing constitutional controversies whilst having very little to do with others Fifthly by acknowledging tax as an important moving part within the contemporary constitution we might understand both tax and constitutional law a little better The book therefore contributes to deeper theoretical debates on the identity of tax law as a discipline the relevance of tax to public lawyers the meaning of state building in the recent history of a developed country and the importance of public finances to a wider sense of what is going on These are questions that ought to command the attention of tax and constitutional law academics as well as policy makers and reformers Runner up of the 2022 SLS Peter Birks Prize for Outstanding Legal Scholarship Making One's Way in the World Martin Bell, 2020-02-28 The book draws on the evidence of landscape archaeology palaeoenvironmental studies ethnohistory and animal tracking to address the neglected topic of how we identify and interpret past patterns of movement in the landscape It challenges the pessimism of previous generations which regarded prehistoric routes such as hollow ways as generally undatable The premise is that archaeologists tend to focus on sites while neglecting the patterns of habitual movement that made them part of living landscapes Evidence of past movement is considered in a multi scalar way from the individual footprint to the long distance path including the traces created in vegetation by animal and human movement It is argued that routes may be perpetuated over long timescales creating landscape structures which influence the activities of subsequent generations In other instances radical changes of axes of communication and landscape structures provide evidence of upheaval and social change Palaeoenvironmental and ethnohistorical evidence from the American North West coast sets the scene with evidence for the effects of burning animal movement faeces deposition and transplantation which can create readable routes along which are favoured resources Evidence from European hunter gatherer sites hints at similar practices of niche construction on a range of spatial scales On a local scale footprints help to establish axes of movement the locations of lost settlements and activity areas Wood trackways likewise provide evidence of favoured patterns of movement and past settlement location Among early farming communities alignments of burial mounds enclosure entrances and other monuments indicate axes of communication From the middle Bronze Age in Europe there is more clearly defined evidence of trackways flanked by ditches and fields Landscape scale survey and excavation enables the dating of trackways using spatial relationships with dated features and many examples indicate long term continuity of routeways Where fields flank routeways a range of methods including scientific approaches provide dates Prehistorians have often assumed that Ridgeways provided the main axes of early movement but there is little evidence for their early origins and rather better evidence for early routes crossing topography and providing connections between different environmental zones The book concludes with a case study of the Weald of South East England which demonstrates that some axes of cross topographic movement used as droveways and generally considered as early medieval can be shown to be of prehistoric origin One reason that dryland routes have proved difficult to recognise is that insufficient attention has been paid to the parts played by riverine and maritime longer distance communication It is argued that understanding the origins of the paths we use today contributes to appreciation of the distinctive qualities of landscapes Appreciation will help to bring about effective strategies for conservation of mutual benefit to people and wildlife by maintaining and enhancing corridors of connectivity between different landscape zones including fragmented nature reserves and valued places In these ways an understanding of past routeways can contribute to sustainable landscapes communities and quality of life
