The Use of Historical Data in Natural Hazard Assessments Thomas Glade, Paola Albini, Félix Francés, 2001-11-30 This book highlights the use of historical data in natural hazard assessments Different types of data such as historical data from written documents are linked to technically measured data such as stream gauge height and consequently river discharge in order to archive new possibilities of probability determination of respective hazardous processes In addition this book strengthens this interdisciplinary approach through the application to different processes of earthquakes floods and landslides Based on worldwide examples the book introduces how various disciplines address the use of historical data in their respective analysis These studies might give suggestions of new approaches in their own field derived from applications shown by other disciplines Audience This volume is of particular interest to professionals interested and involved in natural hazard assessments working at research institutions and organisations large and small scale enterprises governmental agencies as well as private personnel However also advanced students might find the book helpful in addressing specific issues raised in natural hazard courses

International Perspectives on Natural Disasters: Occurrence, Mitigation, and Consequences Joseph P. Stoltman, John Lidstone, Lisa M. DeChano, 2007-03-01 Reports of natural disasters fill the media with regularity Places in the world are affected by natural disaster events every day Such events include earthquakes cyclones tsunamis wildfires the list could go on for considerable length In the 1990s there was a concentrated focus on natural disaster information and mitigation during the International Decade for Natural Disasters Reduction IDNDR The information was technical and provided the basis for major initiatives in building structures designed for seismic safety slope stability severe storm warning systems and global monitoring and reporting Mitigation or planning in the event that natural hazards prevalent in a region would suddenly become natural disasters was a major goal of the decade long program During the IDNDR this book was conceptualized and planning for its completion began The editors saw the need for a book that would reach a broad range of readers who were not actively or directly engaged in natural disasters relief or mitigation planning but who were in decision making positions that provided an open window for addressing natural disaster issues Those people were largely elected public officials teachers non governmental organization staff and staff of faith based organizations Those people for the most part come to know very well the human and physical characteristics of the place in which they are based With that local outreach in mind the editors intended the book to encourage readers to 1

Hazards in a Fickle Environment: Bangladesh C.E. Haque, 1997-12-31 A holistic approach to the nature society relationship and its connection to disasters in Bangladesh Though rooted in the hard science of the Riverbank Erosion Impact Study carried out between 1984 and 1989 Haque geography Brandon U is also very concerned with other aspects of the problem such as the displacement relocation and resettlement of disaster refugees human coping responses to natural hazards social class formation and vulnerability of the population and public policy issues Annotation copyrighted by Book News Inc Portland OR

From Disaster Response to Risk Management Linda C. Botterill, Donald A. Wilhite, 2005-06-15 In 1992 Australia's Commonwealth and State governments announced the introduction of a National Drought Policy adopting an innovative risk management approach which received broad support from Australia's major political parties and the policy community. This trail blazing attempt and the experiences with the development and implementation of this policy over the past decade have intrigued the international scientific and policy communities. The present book comprises an academically focused collection of papers which the Editors hope will provide others moving in a similar direction with the benefit of experience. The work highlights the successes and challenges of a move from disaster to risk management in responding to drought. As such it will be a valuable and useful addition to the international literature on drought preparedness and response. Tsunamis in the Mediterranean Sea 2000 B.C.-2000 A.D. Sergey L. Soloviev, Olga N. Solovieva, Chan N. Go, Khen S. Kim, Nikolay A. Shchetnikov, 2013-03-14 Annals of natural disasters have always caused common interest. Scientists and specialists of various domains, teachers, students, post graduates, journalists, and merely inquisitive can find useful and didactic information in such annals. Sad experience of the natural disasters endured gives very important material for humanity. It allows us not only to understand better the phenomenon itself but also to prepare ourselves for future cataclysms which our Mother Nature is so rich in. The book by Sergey Soloviev and a group of his collaborators represents a detailed description of tsunami waves and accompanying phenomena in the Mediterranean Sea over a period of approximately four thousand years. Sergey Soloviev, the founder and recognised leader of the Russian scientific school of tsunami researchers, was unable to see the publication of this book, passing away on March 9, 1994. However, his ample experience in investigation and systematisation of tsunami waves for the Pacific area. Soloviev and Go, 1974, 1975; Soloviev, Go, and Kim, 1986 has been widely used in compiling this book. The Mediterranean coasts are the cradle of civilisation. Written accounts of past disasters in this region of the Earth are rather numerous and highly reliable. Therefore, the results of the tsunami study in the Mediterranean Sea are of specific value both for the scientific community and for humanity at large. Tsunamis Kenji Satake, 2005-06-28 This book will be of interest to seismologists, oceanographers, volcanologists, coastal engineers, members of the IUGG Tsunami Commission, and staff of operational tsunami warning centers. BOOK JACKET Floods in Bangladesh Thomas Hofer, Bruno Messerli, 2006 Is it really true that deforestation and land use practices of the Himalayan farmers are to blame for the recurring and devastating monsoon floods in the plains of the Ganga and Brahmaputra? The validity of this paradigm has been increasingly questioned. This book presents new evidence resulting from a research project on floods in Bangladesh in the context of highland-lowland linkages. Massive floods have occurred regularly before man's impact on the large river basins began. There is no statistical evidence that the frequency of flooding in Bangladesh has increased during the 20th century. There is indication, however, that the inter-annual variation of floods and the areal extent of big events have increased since 1950. This trend can be related to similar trends in rainfall and discharge patterns. The hydro-meteorological processes in the Himalayas are not the main causes for floods in Bangladesh The combination of simultaneous discharge peaks of the big rivers high runoff from the Meghalaya Hills heavy rainfall in Bangladesh high groundwater tables and spring tides creates particularly favourable conditions for large scale flooding Lateral river embankments and the disappearance of natural water storage areas in the lowlands seem to have a significant impact on the flooding processes Accordingly the myth about deforestation creating big floods and the habit of blaming mountain dwellers for the flood catastrophes must be abandoned However this does not relieve the mountain inhabitants of their responsibility to use and manage the environment sustainably Whereas politicians and engineers perceive monsoon floods as the main problem for Bangladesh the flood affected people are more concerned besides the devastating tropical cyclones with lateral river erosion landlessness and economic survival problems Natural Hazards Burrell E. Montz,Graham A. Tobin,Ronald R. Hagelman,2017-04-21 What can we learn from the spatial patterns of disasters What human and structural factors need to be addressed to explain hazard vulnerability As populations grow and the climate warms how can natural hazards be mitigated Thoroughly revised and updated and now with a more global perspective the second edition of this accessible text provides an integrated framework for understanding and managing natural hazards Numerous case studies from around the world illustrate the complexities of extreme geophysical events and highlight their physical social political and economic dimensions The text identifies essential principles for tackling the fundamental causes of differential vulnerabilities that perpetuate human distress and for promoting recovery and resilience New to This Edition New frameworks for understanding human resilience and adaptive capacity in recovery dynamics of risk and uncertainty and more Chapter on spatial and temporal aspects of hazards Discussions of cutting edge topics such as chronic disasters controversies in international aid and how hazards affect regions differentially Many new case studies including Hurricanes Katrina and Charley Superstorm Sandy the 2011 Japan tsunami Ecuador s chronic volcanic hazard and others Reflects 20 years of research advances across the physical and social sciences development trends new technologies and ongoing global climate change Floods in a Megacity Ashraf Dewan,2013-03-01 Flooding is one of the most devastating natural hazards in the world Available records suggest that both flood frequency and severity are on the rise and this is likely to worsen in the context of climate change As population infrastructure and poverty grow rapidly in developing countries particularly in urban agglomerations of 10 million people or more floods could cause widespread devastation economic damage and loss of life Assessment of vulnerability and risk from naturally occurring phenomena is therefore imperative in order to achieve urban sustainability This book uses geospatial techniques to evaluate hazards risk and vulnerability at a metropolitan scale in a data scarce country An empirical study was performed using remote sensing GIS and census data This research offers a new approach to mapping population infrastructures and communities at risk which can greatly contribute to the deeper understanding of flood disasters in a rapidly expanding megacity Examples shown in this book are from Dhaka Megacity however the techniques and methods can easily be implemented in medium to large cities of similar characteristics The book is essential reading for hazard researchers geospatial scientists disaster management professionals geographers urban planners and social scientists Ashraf M Dewan is currently a Lecturer in the Department of Spatial Sciences at Curtin University Western Australia on leave from his substantive position as Associate Professor in the Geography Environment Department at the University of Dhaka Bangladesh
