

A SUMMARY OF THE Ofsted English Research Review

Foundational Knowledge

English involves teaching how to speak, read and write as well as using these modalities to learn. It is important to teach children the explicit knowledge required for pupils to effectively use these modalities to learn successfully. Knowledge in one domain, such as vocabulary, can be used across the others.

Spoken Language in EYFS and KS1

Developing spoken language - including and especially vocabulary - is essential for the academic progress of all children. Children with a language gap are 4 times more likely to be struggling readers as adults. Addressing the word gap in EYFS and KS1 can help disadvantaged children develop their vocabulary more quickly.

Literacy in EYFS and KS1

Children should begin learning to read and write words in Reception, as part of their phonics teaching. Decoding and transcription should remain a priority in KS1 and above for older pupils who have not mastered the content of this early stage. Alongside this focus, language can be developed through a language-rich environment, e.g. stories, discussions and poems.

Phonics in EYFS and KS1

Daily systematic synthetic phonics, introduced before age 6, leads to a quicker start in early reading and spelling. Direct instruction benefits all children, particularly those from disadvantaged backgrounds and those with reading difficulties. It should be a school priority to intervene with children who are having difficulties. Smaller group and 1:1 sessions with highly-trained adults can support such children who struggle.

Decodable Books

Decodable books allow children to practise applying their phonics knowledge. They are consistent with the phonics knowledge children currently possess and do not require other strategies to work out how to read words. They are one part of the reading provision; it is important that children hear, share and discuss a wide range of high-quality (non-decodable) books as well, but these will come from being read to.

Fluency in EYFS and KS1

It is a priority for children to achieve fluency in the early stages of learning to read. This means that they can read with sufficient accuracy and speed. Fluency frees up children's working memory which will allow them to focus on comprehension. Repeated practice is an effective way of developing fluency.

Assessment of Early Reading Skills

There should be ongoing assessment of children's phonic knowledge to identify pupils who need intervention. Prompt intervention is the most effective form of intervention as it allows pupils to keep up with their peers and to have full access to the curriculum. A focus on struggling readers' knowledge should be a priority for both primary and secondary schools.

International Handbook of Urban Education William T. Pink, George W. Noblit, 2008-09-03 It is evident that urban education has become the central focus of educators at the present time In the U S for example almost one third of all school age children attend schools in large urban school districts It is in these urban schools where the diversity of cultures and languages is highest and where student learning is most problematic What has emerged from recent work to improve urban schools is the insight that there is no one size fits all panacea Rather we have discovered that the local context shapes in critically important ways what will be effective at the school level The universality of the problematics with urban education together with the importance of understanding the local or situated context of improvement interventions brings into sharp focus the importance and timeliness of an undertaking like the International Handbook of Urban Education An important focus of the International Handbook of Urban Education will be the interrogation of both the social and political factors that lead to different problem posing and subsequent solutions within each region An important question to be answered for example is what it takes in terms of resources political will and policy actions to improve urban education
