Committee of Public Accounts, 2014 People turn to out of hours GP services when they are worried about their own health or that of family or friends and want urgent advice or treatment However the urgent and emergency care system is complex and people struggle to know which is the right service to use Patients experience of and satisfaction with the out of hours services varies significantly and unacceptably across the country as does the cost NHS England has not provided effective oversight of whether the services are providing value for money It lacks the basic information needed to understand what lies behind the variations and identify where it should intervene It has not dealt adequately with conflicts of interest which inevitably occur when many commissioners are also providers NHS England also needs to address the perverse financial incentives which get in the way of different urgent care services working effectively together It needs to examine whether the out of hours services are working properly with other services and whether the system encourages duplication when resources are so constrained At the most basic level the Department of Health and NHS England must develop information to be able to know whether there will be enough GPs to cope with the growing workload      The Columbia Documentary History of Race and Ethnicity in America Ronald H. underground writing created an imaginative world beneath the streets of London. The real subterranean railway was therefore re-enacted in number of ways in writing including as Dantean Underworld or hell as gateway to a utopian future as psychological looking glass or as place of safety and security. The book is a chronological study from the opening of the first underground in the 1860s to its role in WW2. Each chapter explores perspectives on the underground in a number of writers starting with George Gissing in the 1880s moving through the work of H G Wells and into the writing of the 1920s and 1930s including Virginia Woolf and George Orwell. It concludes with its portrayal in the fiction poetry and art including Henry Moore of WW2. The approach takes a broadly cultural studies perspective crossing the boundaries of transport history literature and London urban studies. It draws mainly on fiction but also uses poetry art journals postcards and posters to illustrate. It links the actual underground trains tracks and stations to the metaphorical world of underground writing and places the writing in a social political context.

Sisterhood Questioned Christine Bolt, 2004-07-31. This readable and informative survey including both new research and synthesis provides the first close comparison of race class and internationalism in the British and American women's movements during this period. Sisterhood Questioned assesses the nature and impact of divisions in the twentieth century American and British women's movements. In this lucidly written study Christine Bolt sheds new light on these differences which flourished in an era of political reaction economic insecurity polarizing nationalism and resurgent anti feminism. The author reveals how the conflicts were seized upon and publicised by contemporaries and how the activists themselves were forced to confront the increasingly complex tensions. Drawing on a wide range of sources the author demonstrates that women in the twentieth century continued to co-operate despite these divisions and that feminist movements remained active right up to and beyond the reformist 1960s. It is invaluable reading for all those with an interest in American history British history or women's studies.
