to a Press representative that he inclined to the Gardner-Seydett as an ideal touring car, describing it as a delightfully comfortable carriage, gliding along with ease, and in absolute silence. Some very good percentages have been made in France and England with the above cars in hill climbing, non-stop runs, and reliability trials.

INTERNATIONAL STEAM CAR CO.

The Toledo steam carriage is an American vehicle which possesses some very interesting features. Fig. 90 shows an illustration of the model A carriage. The success of a steam carriage depends on the design and manufacture of the leading elements that enter into its construction, and the important features, as the engine, the boiler, burner, and the method of control, should receive attention by intending purchasers. Most of the steam carriages are fitted with fire-tube boilers, but the Toledo car is fitted with a water-tube generator. Fig. 91 shows the boiler partly in section to reveal its construction. The boiler possesses all the advantages of the flash type in its ability to generate steam rapidly, combined with the advantage of the shell type, in having great capacity to draw upon. There are two unique features which enter into the make-up of the boiler. First, that of a centrifugal separator within the shells; secondly, the addition of a superheating coil, the upper end of which is shown in the illustration. The centrifugal action causes the entire body of the water contained between the walls formed by the inner and outer shells to horizontally circulate. This rotary movement throws the water against scoops placed at the mouth of each tube, which direct the water into the lower ends of the tubes, thus producing the rapid steam-making process.
