English Merchant Shipping 1460 1540:

English Merchant Shipping 1460-1540 Dorothy Burwash, 1947-12-15 Between 1460 and 1540 the development of merchant shipping was of vital importance to the growth of England as a European power In this work Miss Burwash offers a complete history of the English merchant marine in the late middle ages and early renaissance period Her account includes a description of the size and design of the ships the trades in which they engaged the business arrangements under which they sailed and the codes of maritime law which governed them the wages and conditions of work of the common seaman and the degree of navigational skill of the shipmasters and pilots This was the time when seamen and merchants of northern Europe were beginning to venture out of the familiar home waters and undertake voyages of discovery such as the Bristol expeditions 1501 1504 which in all probability reached Labrador and possibly Greenland The author concludes that although English shipping faced stiff competition from traders and seamen of other countries in northern Europe most particularly the Dutch the period was one of healthy growth which laid a good foundation for the more brilliant and better known exploits of the Elizabethan age Based on extensive and detailed research in manuscript sources preserved in the Public Record Office British libraries and the British Museum this study is an essential one for serious students of English history The North Sea and Culture (1550-1800) Juliette Roding, Lex Heerma van Voss, 1996 England's Medieval Navy, 1066-1509 Susan Rose, 2013-10-06 Rose looks at every aspect of English naval power in the Medieval period an excellent study of a somewhat neglected period of English naval history History of War We are accustomed to think of England in terms of Shakespeare's precious stone set in a silver sea safe behind its watery ramparts with its naval strength resisting all invaders To the English of an earlier period from the 8th to the 11th centuries such a notion would have seemed ridiculous The sea rather than being a defensive wall was a highway by which successive waves of invaders arrived bringing destruction and fear in their wake Deploying a wide range of sources this new book looks at how English kings after the Norman Conquest learnt to use the Navy of England a term which at this time included all vessels whether Royal or private and no matter what their ostensible purpose to increase the safety and prosperity of the kingdom The design and building of ships and harbour facilities the development of navigation ship handling and the world of the seaman are all described while comparisons with the navies of England's closest neighbours with particular focus on France and Scotland are made and notable battles including Damme Dover Sluys and La Rochelle included to explain the development of battle tactics and the use of arms during the period The author shows in this lucid and enlightening narrative how the unspoken aim of successive monarchs was to begin to build the wall of England its naval defences with a success which was to become so apparent in later centuries The Ship in the Medieval Economy, 600-1600 Richard W. Unger, 1980-01-01 The English Woollen Industry, c.1200-c.1560 John Oldland, 2019-01-15 This is the first book to describe the early English woollens industry and its dominance of the trade in quality cloth across Europe by the mid sixteenth century as English trade was transformed from dependence on wool to value added woollen cloth It compares English and continental draperies weighs the advantages of urban and rural production and examines both quality and coarse cloths Rural clothiers who made broadcloth to a consistent high quality at relatively low cost Merchant Adventurers who enjoyed a trade monopoly with the Low Countries and Antwerp s artisans who finished cloth to customers needs all eventually combined to make English woollens unbeatable on the continent English/British

England John Blair,2007-10-25 The first study of Anglo Saxon and Anglo Norman canals and waterways this book is based on new evidence surrounding the nature of water transport in the period England is naturally well endowed with a network of navigable rivers especially the easterly systems draining into the Thames Wash and Humber The central middle ages saw innovative and extensive development of this network including the digging of canals bypassing difficult stretches of rivers or linking rivers to important production centres The eleventh and twelfth centuries seem to have been the high point for this dynamic approach to water transport after 1200 the improvement of roads and bridges increasingly diverted resources away from the canals many of which stagnated with the reassertion of natural drainage patterns The new perspective presented in this study has an important bearing on the economy landscape settlement patterns and inter regional contacts of medieval England Essays from economic historians geographers geomorphologists archaeologists and place name scholars unearth this neglected but important aspect of medieval engineering and economic growth The Low Countries History Yearbook 1979 C.
