The Eastern sky was a great arc of crystal smitten through with auroral crimsonings She was as slim and lithe as a young white stemmed birch tree her hair was like a soft dusky cloud and her eyes were as blue as Avonlea Harbor in a fair twilight when all the sky is a bloom over it Sentiment with a humorous touch to it prevails in the first two stories of the present book The one relates to the disappearance of a valuable white Persian cat with a blue spot in its tail Fatima is like the apple of her eye to the rich old aunt who leaves her with two nieces with a stern injunction not to let her out of the house Of course both Sue and Ismay detest cats Ismay hates them Sue loathes them but Aunt Cynthia's favor is worth preserving You become as much interested in Fatima's fate as if she were your own pet and the climax is no less unexpected than it is natural especially when it is made also the last act of a pretty comedy of love Miss Montgomery delights in depicting the romantic episodes hidden in the hearts of elderly spinsters as for instance in the case of Charlotte Holmes whose maid Nancy would have sent for the doctor and subjected her to a porous plaster while waiting for him had she known that up stairs there was a note book full of original poems Rather than bear the stigma of never having had a love affair this sentimental lady invents one to tell her mocking young friends The dramatic and unexpected denouement is delightful fun      Further Chronicles of Avonlea L
