The Future of Insurance Regulation in the United States Martin F. Grace, Robert W. Klein, 2009-12-01 A Brookings Institution Press and Georgia State University publication Important changes have buffeted the insurance industry over the past decade The 1999 repeal of key provisions of the Glass Steagall Act unleashed a wave of conglomeration in financial services as bank holding companies acquired insurance and securities businesses and to a much lesser degree insurance companies acquired securities firms and banks Rivalry within the sector has intensified insurance companies have developed products that compete directly with the offerings of banks and securities firms and vice versa In addition the industry has become increasingly global Against this backdrop pressure has been building for fundamental changes to the structure of insurance regulation in the United States Despite several court challenges over the years insurance continues to be regulated by the states Many insurance companies view state regulation as an increasing drag on their efficiency and competitiveness and support a federal regulatory system. However, powerful stakeholders including state officials, state and regional insurance companies, and many insurance agents oppose federal regulation. As a result, proposals to establish an optional federal charter OFC for insurance companies and agents remain mired in fierce debate. The Future of Insurance Regulation in the United States gathers some of the country's leading experts on financial regulation to assess the case for an enhanced federal role in the insurance sector. They pay particular attention to the merits of an OFC and how it might be designed. They also consider the principles that should guide insurance regulatory policies regardless of the institutional framework and examine the implications of financial convergence and the internationalization of insurance markets for an optimal regulatory structure. The debate over insurance regulation has only grown in complexity and intensity since the financial crisis began in the fall of 2008. This book will both inform and help to shape those critical discussions.

The Future of Banking Benton E. Gup, 2002-09-30. The basic functions of banking—lending, deposit taking, and making payments—are constant. What changes are the forms banking takes in response to increases in competition, globalization, new laws, and emerging technologies? Among the most visible of these changes will be an increase in the consolidation and globalization of banking in the world's major trading countries. Now prestigious academics and practitioners, including regulators from around the world, join Benton E. Gup in exploring these coming changes and, by doing so, define a global perspective on banking's future. They find that the consolidation of banking will persist on a global scale. Electronic banking in all its forms will increase in importance, and banking in mature economies will be even more different from what it is now in developing economies. While focusing on the financial system in the United States, Gup's panel of contributors also explores financial systems in Europe, Asia, and elsewhere. Like Gup, they predict that a small handful of very large banks will control a disproportionate share of bank assets. Their views provide an unusual survey of current thinking in the domains of banking and finance and an important source of current information, background, and foresights for banking and finance practitioners, students, and academics.

The Future of Microfinance Ira W. Lieberman, Paul DiLeo, Todd A. Watkins, 2020-06-30. A major source of financing for the poor and no longer a niche industry, over the past four decades microfinance—the provision of loans, savings, and insurance to small businesses and entrepreneurs shut out of traditional capital markets—has grown from a niche service in Bangladesh and a few other countries to a significant global source of financing. Some 200 million people globally now receive support from microfinance institutions, with most of the recipients in the developing world.
