Miss Evans lived in a big city, and she had a very clever dog. She sent it to a good school in the country. After a few months it came back for the summer holidays, and Miss Evans said to it, "What did you study at your school?"

"We studied English, arithmetic, history and foreign languages," the dog said, "and we played football."

"And were you a good pupil?" Miss Evans asked.

"I wasn't very good at arithmetic and history," the dog said, "but I was good at foreign languages and football."

"That's good," Miss Evans said. "Now please say something to me in a foreign language."

The dog said, "Meow, meow!"

Bill and Ben were drunk. They got on to a bus, and Bill said, "I'm going to buy the tickets," but Ben said, "No, I'm going to buy them." He pushed Bill into a seat.

There was another man near the back of the bus. His clothes were blue. Ben went to him and said, "Two tickets to Gosport Bridge, please."

But the man did not take Ben's money. He said to him angrily, "Don't give that to me. I'm a naval officer."

Ben looked at the man for a few seconds and then shouted to his friend, "Come here, Bill! We're going to get out of here! We've made a mistake! This isn't a bus. It's a ship!"
