James Patrick J. Hartin, 2003 Hartin's study begins with a detailed examination of the letter's literary background and its relationships within the context of the Jewish Hellenistic and emerging Christian worlds From this examination James emerges clearly as a writing at home within the world of Jewish Christianity Those complex issues of genre authorship and readership are examined and Hartin argues convincingly that James is an early writing stemming from the authority of James the brother of the Lord who writes to those Jewish Christians in the dispersion of northern Syria BOOK JACKET

Homer's Winged Words Steve Reece, 2009 For over 2500 years many of the most learned scholars of the Greek language have concerned themselves with the topic of etymology The most productive source of difficult even inexplicable words was Homer's 28 000 verses of epic poetry Steve Reece proposes an approach to elucidating the meanings of some of these difficult words that finds its inspiration primarily in Milman Parry's oral formulaic theory He proposes that during the long period of oral transmission acoustic uncertainties especially regarding word boundaries were continually occurring a bard uttered one collocation of words but his audience thought it heard another The consequent resegmentation of words and phrases is the probable cause of some of the etymologically inexplicable words in our Homeric texts
