Integrating Sexual Medicine in Obstetrics and Gynecology Practice: Highlights from the Sexual Medicine Fellowship Program

Joachim Osur^{1*}

*Correspondence: Joachim.osur@amref.org

Background: Studies from across the world estimate the population prevalence of sexual dysfunctions to range from 20% to >50%. Unlike what was previously thought, >70% of sexual dysfunctions are psychiatric and are associated with causes that are gynecological, obstetric, urological, endocrine, or social. Most sexual dysfunctions are symptoms of noncommunicable diseases. A good proportion of patients with sexual medicine problems are seen by obstetricians and gynecologists. Despite its high prevalence, training in sexual medicine has not been formalized in most African countries. As such, few professionals have been trained abroad. Furthermore, there is poor regulation of the practice, a lack of institutionalization of practice guidelines, and a lack of medicines and supplies for treating sexual dysfunctions, all because there are few trained professionals to provide the needed leadership.

Intervention: Noting the gap in training and regulation, the International Society for Sexual Medicine and Amref International University have developed a one-year fellowship program on sexual medicine. The program is designed to help professionals who frequently encounter patients with sexual medicine complaints gain knowledge and skills for treating such patients. The program also connects scholars to the global sexual medicine community to enhance research and improve the quality of care in sexual medicine.

Objective: The congress presentation will focus on the content of the Sexual Medicine curriculum, the faculty, and the global connections that scholars make by joining the program. It will also discuss possible avenues for Kenya Obstetrical and Gynaecological (KOGS) members to join the program with minimal disruption to their busy practices.
