Fibrin Sealant in Operative Medicine G. Schlag,H. Redl,1986 Fibrin plays a prominent role in wound healing It has a hemostatic effect induces cellular response to wound damage and by forming strands to build a matrix assists in neovascularization and fibroblast proliferation The concept of using clotting substances from human blood for wound management and to achieve hemostasis in bleeding parenchymatous organs can be traced to 1909 when Bergel 1 reported on the hemostatic effect of fibrin powder In 1915 Grey 3 employed fibrin to control bleeding in neurosurgical operations of the brain A year later Harvey 4 used fibrin patches to stop bleeding from parenchymatous organs in general surgery It took more than two decades for this ingenious idea to be rediscovered In 1940 Young and Medawar 8 reported on experimental nerve anastomosis by sealing Similarly Tarlov and Benjamin 7 reunited nerves with plasma clots in 1943 Tarlov improved the results obtained with clot anastomosing of nerves by avoiding tension at the nerve stumps In 1944 Cronkite et al 2 reported on an initial series of eight cases in which fibrinogen and thrombin had been used successfully for anchoring skin grafts

Lasers in Gynecology Gunther Bastert,Diethelm Wallwiener,2012-12-06 A synopsis of the use of lasers in gynecology is presented in this book it is supported by more than 10 years of experience and backed up by studies in the fields of experimental surgery technical medicine and clinical gynecology The authors show how laser assisted preparation has broadened the spectrum of operative possibilities in gynecology Major points of attention are experimental surgery and basic research details of application with respect to specific indications and future potential Furthermore the clear definition of the possibilities and limitations of laser technology puts an end to the highly stylized view of a patent wonder divorced from general operative standards There is no doubt that users of laser technology stand on the threshold of a promising development and yet despite the present elegant applications the first steps to maturity are only now being taken
