There are a number of ways to use the `getenv` function. For example, you can use it to get the value of the `PATH` environment variable, which is a list of directories that the system searches for executables. You can also use it to get the value of the `HOME` environment variable, which is the user's home directory. The `getenv` function returns a pointer to a string that contains the value of the environment variable. If the environment variable does not exist, the function returns `NULL`.
