

Child Welfare Hearing Quality Research: What Legal Professionals Should Know

As legal professionals practicing in child welfare courts, you can better prepare for and participate in court hearings if you understand how hearing quality affects the case process and outcomes. Research is starting to explore what activities and behaviors are associated with child welfare hearing quality. This document highlights both what is currently known and gaps in understanding.

Hearing Quality Components*

Judicial inquiry and engagement of hearing participants

Breadth, depth, and relevance of discussion

Parent attendance and engagement

Child attendance and engagement

Child welfare agency attendance and engagement

Quality of representation for the parent, child, and child welfare agency

Attention to and application of legal standards

*For more information about these components, see Richards, T., Sammons, A., Gaisowski, S., Fosenkoebbe, A., & Ruben, J. (2021). Conceptual model of judicial decision-making and hearing quality in child welfare (OPRE Brief No. 2021-86). Washington, DC: Office of Planning, Research, and Evaluation, Administration for Children and Families, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

What activities and behaviors are associated with hearing quality?

Research shows the following activities and behaviors are related to child welfare court hearing quality:

- ✓ The judge and court participants discuss key topics in a meaningful way.
How the judge gets information during the hearing and the number and kinds of questions judges ask can affect hearing quality. Discussion is high-quality when judges ask direct questions, ask follow-up questions,¹ ask about different topics,² expand discussion on topics,³ and ask relevant questions.⁴ The number of topics discussed at a hearing may play a role in reducing how long children spend in temporary care and whether they reunify with their parents.⁵
- ✓ Parents attend and engage meaningfully in hearings.
Research shows when parents attend court hearings their children's permanency outcomes, such as family reunification, improve.⁶ When judges seek parent input during hearings, the child may be more likely to be placed temporarily with family members,⁷ and the child may achieve permanency faster.⁸ Parents are more likely to keep attending their hearings when they are represented by an attorney and engaged in early hearings.⁹ Some research finds the number of topics discussed increases when parents attend their hearings.¹⁰
- ✓ Children attend and engage meaningfully in hearings.
Having children attend and engage in their court hearings is often required by state law unless it will harm the child. This gives the child a chance to be seen and heard directly and have input in the judge's decisions in the case. While few studies have looked at the impact of children attending and engaging in their hearings, one study found that when children are present and actively participating in court they may spend less time in foster care waiting for a permanent home.¹¹
