

Family Nursing Care Plan – Health Promotion and Disease Prevention

 Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

A nursing care plan is a tool that nurses design to identify, assess, and systematically minimize or eliminate potential healthcare threats using tailored interventions and goal-oriented approaches to achieve desired outcomes. A family nursing care plan focuses on solutions to deal with current health issues facing individuals in a household and collective preventive measures to deter potential health risk factors. This essay describes a family nursing care plan addressing a three-generation family household comprised of a toddler, a teenager, a pregnant young adult, a father, a mother, and grandparents.

Family Members and Potential Health Issues

The youngest member of the family is four years old in relatively good health. However, the toddler is exposed to a range of infectious diseases. He has stopped breastfeeding and was recently enrolled in a baby care institution where he interacts with others from different environments and backgrounds. Additionally, the child showcases poor eating habits, exposing him to malnutrition. On the other hand, the teenager exhibits good health, but she is enrolled in an educational institution where she interacts with others constantly. Moreover, she is exposed to social risks such as sexual activity, recreational drug abuse, and emotional concerns as she is an adolescent.

The pregnant young adult is the firstborn of the family, and she is 25 years old. She has a history of asthma and reports being sick from time to time, which is critical for her condition. However, she does not use any drugs or suffer from pre-existing medical conditions. Nonetheless, she requires appropriate lifestyle practices to take care of herself and the unborn baby. The two parents are working full-time in offices, forcing them to engage in limited physical activities. Additionally, they are exposed to mental conditions associated with stress because they have to take care of their elderly
