INTRODUCTION: THE CONCEPTS BEHIND THE CAPITAL APPROACH

Capital budgeting is the process of evaluating proposed projects by comparing their expected cash flows over time with the cost of the investment. This approach is often referred to as the capital approach or capital budgeting.

Capital project analysis is closely related with, but distinct from, financial management. Financial management is concerned with the financing of assets and the distribution of earnings to shareholders. Capital project analysis is concerned with the acquisition of assets and the distribution of earnings to shareholders. Financial management is concerned with the financing of assets and the distribution of earnings to shareholders. Capital project analysis is concerned with the acquisition of assets and the distribution of earnings to shareholders.

The capital approach has application to projects such as buying a factory, building a new plant, or acquiring equipment. It can also be applied to projects such as buying a new car, buying a house, or buying a boat.
