

Disadvantages of Women

The principles of an effective legal system are fairness, equity and justice. For women, these principles have been lost thru the law making process in history in areas of gender bias, workplace, health and violence. The status of women has dramatically changed over the last 200 years including; the right to vote, the right to own property, the right to paid work, and the right to an education. These changes were as a result of shifts in social expectations regarding the role of women in the community and action taken specialist groups and government initiatives.

In 1978 women made up 36% of the workplace, 38 years later women's participation in the workplace has only increased by 9.9% according to the Catalyst. This is due to extensive legislation enacted over the past 30 years including the Anti discrimination Act 1977 (NSW) and the Sex Discrimination Act 1984 (Cwlth) which endeavors that no employer can deny someone a position whether they are male or female. However, women are still disadvantaged by positions in the workforce and unequal pay. The Industrial Arbitration (Female Rates) Amendment Act 1959 (NSW) legislates the principle that women are to be paid the same rate as males however the act only applies to women who performed the same job as males in the workplace. In 1969, the first equal pay test case was heard, the equal pay case (1964) similarly established that, equal work should earn equal wages, as long as the work was not mainly performed by women (Hamper et al. 2009). Henceforth both Acts discredit principles of law as most in women in the workforce only work "female" jobs.

With more women in the workplace more businesses must provide parental leave. The Fair Work Act 2009 (Cwlth) only references unpaid leave and as a result about 38% of Australian women were provided paid maternity leave policy (The university of Melbourne, 2013). In January 2011 the Abbott government introduced the first national paid parental leave scheme, which allows eligible employees who are the primary carer of a newborn or adopted child get up to, 18 weeks leave paid at the national minimum wage. However, as of July 1st 2016 primary earners lost full access to government-funded paid parental leave if their workplace also provides leave, leaving half of new mothers in the workplace disadvantaged as they will be partially or completely ineligible for Abbotts scheme.

The Australian media has dramatically influences and impacted on changing the social attitudes towards women and influencing the government by highlighting the importance of domestic violence by providing compelling evidence, which allows awareness to the problem. The coverage can be seen Australian women have experienced physical or sexual violence and, at least one woman's work is killed by a partner or former partner in Australia every 10 days (The Herald, 2016). The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was the first major law that related specifically for domestic violence however this has shown to not enough as more legal reforms are needed to protect the rights of women caught in violent situations. The UN women's organization is working towards strengthening women's political and economic by helping other women's advocacy groups such as the office for women and the women's electoral body. Prevention action from other countries as UNW are the governments central response to domestic violence however the case of Rana Mary highlights action can be reached and action for example death case for the tragic death.
